El Al delays purchase decision

By HAIM SHAPIRO

The El Al board of directors last night decided to put off until today a decision about whether to choose Boeing or Airbus as the supplier of a new fleet of five medium-range aircraft. chairman Board

Ciechanover said that after seeing that discussions could last far into the night, the directors decided to adjourn and reconvene at 10 a.m.

this morning.

A decision will probably be announced at around noon, an El Al spokesman said.

Tension has run high in the process of choosing between the American and European manufacturers. The planes involved, the Airbus 319 and 320 and the Boeing 737-700 and 737-800, are almost identical, but Airbus is said to have offered a lower price and faster delivery.

Countering these factors is some considerable pressure from the US to continue El Al's relationship with Boeing, which has been its sole supplier for several years.

LUXEMBOURG Minister Binyamin Netanyahu and Palestinian Authority Chairman Yasser Arafal signalled yesterday they had approved a US document for security cooperation, and agreed they would meet with US President Bill Clinton separately in Washington next

The agreements emerged after talks between US Secretary of State Madeleine Albright with Netanyahu in Paris and with Arafai in London.

After his meeting, Arafat said the Palestinians had approved a US document on security, which included amendments to a plan proposed by the Palestinians. "We now hope the Israeli side will approve that document," he said. Theoretically, on Monday, there should be a meeting to put in action and operation that plan."

Arafat said he might meet Netanyahu "in the presence of a third party" to try to revive the peace talks. He made the cryptic remark - a possible hint at direct US mediation - after meeting with British Foreign Secretary Robin Cook in London.

Netanyahu indicated after his three-hour session with Albright that a mechanism had been put into motion by which the US would be constantly involved in preparing for the next 1DF redeployment in the West Bank.
At the session were Assistant Secretary of State for Middle Eastern Affairs Martin Indyk, policy adviser Aaron Miller, and peace coordinator Denois Ross.

"We will bave a next-step mechanism," Netanyahu said, "but I prefer to discuss that with my cabinet colleagues," presumably at Sunday's weekly session. Netanyahu said the cabinet deliberations and meetings with Albright are "the process by which we will move towards redeployment." However, he hinged the pullback's implementation by next June at the earliest on total Palestinian fulfillment of obligations undertaken in the Hebron Agreement to eliminate terrorism. This "corrective" approach to the PA is embodied in an as-yet unpublicized document, versions of which were drafted in Washington and Jerusalem for presentation by Albright to Arafat after her talks with Netanyahu, which they want Arafat to sign.

Implementation by the PA's security services would then be monitored by Tel Aviv- and Jerusalem- based Central Intelligence Agency officials and Israeli authorities. Netanyahu called this "two sides of an equation" whereby the Netanyahu repeatedly denied that any changes in the IDF's cur-

"We did not offer any percentages," he said, but rather "explained Israel's strategic concerns and security interests. The Americans understand that we are serious in our iotention to advance

He said OC Planning Branch
Maj.-Gen, Shlomo Yanai went into detail by means of a map based on the Oslo Accords. "We emphasized that the process depends on fulfillment of the Palestinians' commitments" to eliminate terrorism from the areas under their jurisdiction.

Albright called her meetings with Netanyahu and Arafat "substantive and intensive and focused" on resolving differences mostly over security and control of the West Bank. She said it is now up to the two leaders to work to reach an agreement on how much land Israel will cede to Palestinian control in a final set-

PA tries to stymie large Hamas rally

The Palestinian Authority has prevented Hamas activists from staging a large rally in Gaza's Yarmuk Stadium today, offering them the option of staging it at a smaller site instead.

Palestinians claim that the Palestinian Police arrested 80-100 activists as they were hanging up posters giving details of the rally, which is to be addressed by Sheikh Ahmed Yassin.

The rally was organized to mark the 10th anniversary of the intifada and the second anniversary of the assassinations of Hamas activists Yihye Ayyash and Immad Akel.

According to his parliamentary aide, he decided to remain in Syria "for several reasons" and was scheduled to meet with the Hamas leadership there last night.

Student pilot and instructor die in crash

Flight instructor Yaron Niv, 36, of Ra'anana, and student Orly Hazan, 25, of Eilat, died while flying a light plane yesterday, after trying unsuccessfully to make an emergency landing at the Herzliya air field. According to preliminary investigations, the causes of the crash appear to be engine failure and pilot error, said Kochav Hess, a Civil Aviation Authority official who investigates air crashes. Several minutes after takeoff the pilot reported strange engine noises, and while trying to land, the aircraft stalled and crashed, striking a storage building before it broke apart, investigators said.

Hiriya dump threatens access to airport

The Hiriya garbage dump could collapse and prevent access to Ben-Gurion Airport from the Geha Road, Environment Ministry Director-General Nehama Ronen said, during a tour of the site. A landslide from the garbage dump earlier this week blocked part of the Ayalon River. The order issued by Environment Minister Raphael Eitan allowing for the river to be diverted is being contested by landowners, who say the diversion cuts across their property. The Ayalon is in danger of flooding because of the garbage blockages and the water could reach the Geha Road, about half a kilometer away, ministry officials believe.

LONDON - Senior British officials yesterday set Europe and Israel on a collision course, when they said London will exert intense pressure on Israel to be more forthcoming in the peace process after Britain assumes the presidency of the European Union on January 1.

They signalled that, despite Israeli objections, Europe now intends to translate its formidable economie power into political clout and become a major player in the peace process.

Egypt to PM: Don't come empty-handed

By DOUGLAS DAVIS and news agencies

LONDON - Egyptian Foreign Minister Amr Moussa said in comments published yesterday that Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu should not come to Egypt unless he has something new to offer to revive peace efforts. Moussa also told the Londonbased daily al-Hayar that changes in the views of the Iranian leadership on world affairs, including peace overtures with Israel, had paved the way for improved Egyptian-Iranian relations.

Asked if Egypt was willing to receive Netanyahu, Moussa replied: 'No, because he has nothing new to offer. If we are going to talk to him about his past and the unfulfilled promises then the conversation will be a repetition and what it would cost and the harm it will cause outweighs its benefit.

"We are not saying we don't want to deal with the Israeli prime minister - there is nothing to prevent him from coming.

"If he (Netanyahu) has taken a position that everyone thinks means he has turned his back on the peace process, then we won't make it easy for him to swallow Palestine or to pressure the Palestinians to accept what he has to offer which is linle," Moussa

Israeli officials are concerned that Egypt is producing stocks of highly lethal VX nerve gas at a supposedly conventional chemicals factory near Cairo.

Concern has been heightened by recent Egyptian military maneuvers, which "showed that Egypt considers Israel as its potential enemy," according to the weekly newslener Foreign Report published yesterday.

Quoting an Israeli source, the newsletter says that "all recent Egyptian army maneuvers are programmed to send the army into the Sinai peninsula to fight the

And it quotes Israeli intelligence reports as indicating that "there is serious possibility of the Egyptian army entering the Sinai peninsula if Palestinian-Israeli relations deteriorate further and Israel decides to attack the Palestinian territories.

"Such an eventuality," it adds, would force Israel to send at least two divisions to its southern border to block a possible – even if remote – Egyptian attack."

Egypt has hinted that it is prepared to destroy its stocks of VX gas if Israel opens its nuclear facilities to international inspection and signs an agreement on the non-proliferation of weapons of mass destruction.

But the newslener adds: "Israel has explained that this is out of the question - not because of Egypt, but because of Syrian, Iraqi and tranian threats to Israel.

The Israeli source told Foreign Report that Egypt delivered its first chemical weapons to Syria in 1972 as part of the preparation for the Yom Kippur War in October

In the final stages of the war, an Israeli expeditionary force crossed the Suez Canal, surrounded the Egyptian Third Army and blockaded about 10,000 Egyptian sol-

"At that point, Egypt ordered the opening of armories where the secret weapons were stored, in preparation for using them. It was only after Israeli military intelligence intercepted the orders to use the lethal gas that Israel allowed food and water to be brought to the besieged Egypuans. That was, the end of the war.

Egypt was the first Arab country to use chemical weapons when its aircraft dropped mustard gas. bombs on Yemeni civilians in the village of Sadah, near the Saudi border, on June 8, 1963. Egyptian raids on Yemeni villages continued until the summer of 1967 and lethal gas has been in production ever since. Thousands of tons of chemical weapons are believed to have been produced.

Barak accuses PM of capitulating to Albright

Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu "has capitulated," Labor Party chairman Ehud Barak charged yesterday. "He told us that he presented the Americans with no new maps, but he knows full well that he had already undertaken to pull back from 10.5 percent of the land under our control."

Addressing fellow Laborites at the party's political bureau ses-sion, Barak maintained that Netanyahu is guilty of duplicity. He thinks he can fool all of the people all of the time. He certainly attempted to mislead his own he is going to Paris with no maps, that he will not refer to the security interests map, and that he will not refer to the national interests map. All this after he had already committed Israel beforehand to cede over 10% of Area C."

Barak then went on to accuse Netanyahu of having "capitulated to the Americans. There is no other way to describe what has happened except as a total, unconditional surrender. All the commitments have already been made to the Americans. What we witness now is a show and nothing more." The "road to capitulation was self into this American dictate. It is a shame that he handled things in such a manner that it had come to this. It would have been better if Israel had ceded territory as a result of negotiations, and of its own free will, and not because its prime minister caved in to pressure which . he had invited," Barak contended.

Netanyami, according to Barak, "may not have unfolded the security or national interests maps, but the one map which guided him was the map of his own political

Labor politicians were angry yesterday with the hiring of private investigator Meir Palevsky to head a party "security service," and said they suspected that his real job would be to spy on them. Party leader Ehud Barak denied hiring Palevsky, although Barak's office said Wednesday that Palevsky was hired with his full approva Palevsky also said that it wasn't Barak who took him on, but he would not say who did. Many Labor members suspect that Palevsky's brief will be to spy on them. They maintain that per-sonal surveillance is Palevsky's well-proven specialty.

He was involved in various affairs in Labor over the decades. The most famous involved some letters written against Yitzhak Rabin in 1978, at the height of Rabin's feud with Shimon Peres. Rabin suspected the letters were bogus and Palevsky elicited proof that they were the handiwork of former Peres aide Yossi Beilin. Barak has come under stinging attack in Labor ever since last week's uneventful Labor convention in which he failed to win approval for his plan-to appoint a director-general.

Barak was accused of being dictatorial and of dismissing the party and its MKs as hindrances to his prime ministerial aspirations. A number of Labor MKs argued that Barak may have grown even more suspicious and wary than previously, in light of the postconvention onslaught against him. "He may have sought to preempt what he suspects are plots being hatched against him hy hiring professional help," a prominent Labor MK said last night. "It is no accident Palevsky just happens to have appeared on the scene precisely when anti-Barak sentiment reached unprecedented levels. ... This is obviously a move geared to stem internal criticism of the party leader - in the best tradition of undemocratic leaders.

Pollard lawyer: Truth could embarrass gov't

Josathan Pollard's well-publicized rebuke of Foreign Minister Levy personally, but at the Foreign Ministry in general, his Jerusalem lawyer, Larry Dub, said yesterday.

munications Minister Limor Livnar Binyamin Netanayhu. on Wednesday, Pollard - angry at reports that the Foreign Ministry was discouraging Israeli officials -likened Levy to the "idiot" who built the bridge that collapsed at the Maccabiah Games last summer. Dub said that recent visits by Livnat and Absorption Minister Yuli Edelstein to Pollard in prison, as well as a letter to Pollard sent hy Labor and Social Affairs Minister Eli Yishai, are not indicative of any policy change on the Pollard affair. but were done at the ministers' initiative. Livnat also brought a letter to Pollard from Prime Minister Dub alleged that the government is lying by saying that it has to work quictly to obtain Pollard's rogue spy operation, and that he has never expressed remorse.

The government, Duh maintained, still has not claimed responsibility for Pollard.

Pollard, a former US navy analyst, was arrested in November 1985 and sentenced later to life in prison for spying for Israel.

A petition is pending before the High Court of Justice which seeks to force the government to recognize Pollard as an Israeli agent.

The three-justice panel has scheduled another session on the petition for next month.

Duh said he is convinced Pollard publicly recognizes that he worked as an agent for the government.

A Foreign Ministry official said yesterday that although its policy has been to try and win Pollard's release through "quiet channels," away from media attention, the ministry is not opposed to high-roofile meetings with Pollard profile meetings with Pollard.

Following the visits by Edelstein and Livnat, the official said, it is safe to assume that Pollard's prison in North Carolina will become a pilgrimage site for other Israeli dignitaries. "We have no objections," the official said.

In a recorded conversation Pollard alleged Israel's policy toward him was "burying me alive."

"They [Israel] want me here for as long as they [the US authori-ties] bloody well keep me here. If I die here, the truth will die with me," Pollard added at the time.

Dub contended there are officials in the Foreign and Defense ministries who would end up with "egg on their faces" if lies about the affair were ever exposed.

Six Day War general Narkiss dies

Uzi Narkiss, under whose command in 1967 Israeli troops liberated Jerusalem's Old City in the Six Day War, died late Wednesday night at the capital's Hadassah-University Hospital, Ein Kerem, after a long illness. He was 72. As OC Central Command, it was Narkies who dispersed the het was Narkiss who directed the battalions in capming the castem half of the city on June 7. Earlier that morning, after receiving Mordechai (Motta) Gur's famous radio transmission - "The Temple Mount is in our hands!" - Narkiss went to the Temple Mount to share the historic moment with the paratroopers who captured it.

There was never such a thing as this for the one who stands here now," Narkiss said. "There are no words on my lips. We all pay tribute to history."

Simcha Dinitz, former head of the Jewish Agency and World Zionist Organization, where Narkiss worked for over 20 years following his retirement from the army in 1968, praised Narkiss. "We have lost a great soldier, a very decent buman being, and a great public servant, who served his country in time of war as well as in time of development," said Dinitz. "He showed a high sense of dedication, ability, and humility, and we will sorely miss him."

Born January 6, 1925 in Jerusalem, Narkiss was a 16-yearold at the Gymnasia High School when he joined the Palmah's 1st Company, under Yigal Allon, It was the start of a 27-year army

While serving as battalion com-mander in the War of Independence, Narkiss attempted to come to the relief of the besieged Jewish Quarter in the Old City in May 1948, breaking through Zion Gate before being ordered to pull out.

He also commanded the Etzion Bloc settlements for three months, before it fell to Jordan.

Narkiss was sent to France in 1953 as the first Israeli student at Ecole de Guerre, and was military attache there from 1959-1962. He was later awarded the Legion of Honor by the French government.

Narkiss was named the first director of the National Defense College when it opened in 1963. and was named OC Central Command in December 1965.

The man who undid the past

By ABRAHAM RABINOVICH

History offered Uzi Narkiss a second chance in June 1967 and he seized it with both hands. For 19 years, he had been haunted by a sense of unease over his role in the fall of the Jewish Quarter. As a deputy battalion commander in the Palmah brigade commanded by Yitzhak Rabin, Narkiss was ordered in May 1948 to break through to the besieged quarter.

His men succeeded in blowing a hole in Zion Gate and linking up with the beleaguered defenders. Supplies and reinforcements were rushed in and wounded evacuated, but the force that was to relieve Narkiss's men did not materialize. Unwilling to keep his elite unit bottled up, he ordered his men our. Nine days later the quarter fell.

As OC Central Command on the eve of the Six Day War, Narkiss was suddenly confronted by the extraordinary possibility of undoing the past. However, he was cautioned by defense minister Moshe Dayan that the entire offensive weight of the IDF was being committed to the Egyptian front. Even in the face of Jordanian provocation, he was to exercise restraint.

The Jordanian intervention proved substantial and a paratroop brigade no longer needed on the Egyptian front was dispatched to Jerusalem to relieve the threatened Israeli enclave on Mt. Scopus. Conferring with the paratroop commander, Col. Motta Gur, on his planned breakthrough to Mr. Scopus via Ammunition Hill, Narkiss told him to also dispatch forces to the Rockefeller Museum, two kilometers south, so as to be in position to penetrate the Old City walls. Until that point, no one in authority had broached the idea of attacking the Old City.

Less than two days later, Narkiss reentered the walled city, together with Dayan and Rabin. Despite the exaltation of the moment, Narkiss cautioned all forces against looting or harming any holy places.

Even as a conquering general, Uzi Narkiss remained a mensch.

Teddy bares all

A police raid Wednesday on an apartment in Jerusalem's Kiryat Menahem neighborhood resulted in the arrest of the 25-year-old mother of a six year old, after police found the child's teddy bear filled with drugs.

Following a three-week stakeout, police found 38 Ecstasy pills, 20 other drug pills, 45 tabs of LSD, and 350 grams of manijuana in the teddy bear in the bedroom of Sigal Malcha. Her lawyer asked the judge to take into consideration that Malcha has a sixyear-old child, to which Judge Uri Ben-Dor replied; "I feel very sorry that the mother herself didn't represent that the horse herself didn't remember that she has a sixyear-old daughter," remanding her for six days.

Palestinian helped by Dayan dies

Osama Hassan, the Palestinian treated on Wednesday night by OC Central Command Maj.-Gen. Uzi Dayan, died early yesterday morning in Ramallah Hospital.

He had been trapped in his car after an accident, when Dayan, on his way to honor a fallen IDF soldier Wednesday night, stopped to administer first aid. Dayan had been flying in his helicopier, when he spotted the accident. He ordered his pilot to land and rushed to help. Dayan resuscitated Hassan and applied a tourniquet, while other officers pried open the wreck. Dayan only let up when an IDF doctor arrived.

Husseini urges two capitals in Jerusalem

The fact that Faisal Husseini, Uzi Landau and Nissim Zvilli did not appear on the same dais at yesterday's session on "What Prospects for the Peace Process?" at the Seventh International Conference of the Jewish Media seemed to answer the question before the discussion began.

But despite the undiplomatic staging, Husseini, of the Palestinian Authority, and Zvilli, Labor's secretary-general, beld out hope for the peace process, while Landau, of the Likud, predictably all but buried it.

Husseini, in charge of Jerusalem affairs for the PA, was escorted by several Palestinian security men. "If I'm looking at the long term, I'm optimistic, and I believe peace

We believe the solution in Jerusalem must be...two capitals in one, open free-access city. I'm not talking about a unified city, a united city, but free access in Jerusalem," he continued.

Husseini proposed that the "1967 lines" be used to set the limits of each capital.

"There would be no need for any type of visas for traveling between these two capitals. Maybe we'll have two municipalities or one municipality. Maybe we'll have tourist police or capital police. which will be a joint police to operate in areas where there is direct contact between the two

"Oslo no looger exists as a real peace process," Landau, chairman of the Knesset Foreign and Affairs Committee, said. "What we've got now is a situation where we're offering to trade land for time. We are giving them land and gaining some time." Landau said he would oppose making another withdrawal unless the Palestinians met all their comwant peace, like every Israeli, but we believe we can achieve it."

He said that little progress could be made "if we keep saying no, and if we destroy the confidence we worked so hard to build." Robert Bleiweiss, editor of The Jewish Speciator quarterly magazine, said the discussion "reminded me of the commentary on the Talmud: He's right, and he's right and he's right.' I'm not optimistic about the chances for peace at all." The Oslo Accord, he said was a

By ARYEH DEAN COHEN and news agencies

The families of four Australians killed in the Maccabiah bridge collapse in July have called on the government to conduct a public inquiry or face years of lingation.

They have wrinen to Deputy Education Minister Moshe Peled calling for an independent inquiry into the Maccabi World Union, the organizer of the games, which is partly funded by the government.

A spokesman for Peled said yesterday that the ministry was still looking into the call for an independeot inquiry, but that it is "leaning toward" supporting such a posi-

Colin Elterman, the father of Sacha Elterman, 15, who is still in serious condition in a Sydney hospital, said the union had refused to admit liability for the collapse, and families of the victims had received only sporadic payments of compensation from Maccabiah authorities.

The families want someone independent to take a vacuum cleaner and run it right through the executive of the games organizers to suck out the bad parts," Elterman

- including the head of Australian Maccabi - have resigned in protest over the treatment of the families.

Maccabi Australia president Tom Goldman and other Australian officials have backed the call for an independent inquiry and for the resignation of the union officials involved. Goldman is expected here Sunday to attend the World Maccabi meeting of presidents. Australian Maccabi is reportedly waiting for the outcome of that meeting before deciding whether to withdraw from the Maccabi World Union.

Two weeks ago State Attorney Edna Arbel released a police report which was expected to result in the indictment of five people, including games organizer Yoram Eyal.

Clinton extends US presence in Bosnia

US President Bill Clinton announced a new extension of US military involvement in Bosnia-Herzegovina yesterday, saying troops will remain there as part of a NATO-led peacekeeping force beyond his earlier deadline of

A full and fair reading of Bosnia's history and honest assessment of the progress of the last 23 months simply refutes the proposition that the Dayton peace agreement cannot work," Clinton said as the White House.

"But if we pull out before the job is done. Bosnia will almost certainly will fall back into violence, chaos, and ultimately a war every bit as bloody as one that was stopped."

Meanwhile, NATO said its peacekeeping force in Bosnia had captured two Bosnian Croat war crimes suspects overnight, exchanging fire with one of the men after he resisted arrest.

"SFOR [the NATO-led multinational peacekeeping force] detained two Bosnian Croats, Vlatko Kupreskic and Anto Furundzija, who are indicted for war crimes by the International Criminal Tribunal for former Yugoslavia," NATO Secretary General Javier Solana said in a statement.

Irish to release 9 IRA prisoners

DUBLIN (Reuters) - The Irish government said yesterday it will this week free nine Irish Republican Army prisoners early, including a man named at his trial more than 20 years ago as the IRA's main organizer in Britain.

The release, set for today at a top security jail near Dublin, was apparently meant to boost peace talks seeking an end to years of strife in Northern Ireland.

Sinn Fein, the political arm of the IRA which wants an end to British rule of the province, called the decision "a positive step." Irish broadcaster RTE said. Sinn Fein leader Gerry Adams has said any peace settlement must include the release of IRA But the pro-British Democratic Unionist Party, representing the IRA," RTE said.

British and Irish leaders Tony Blair and Bertie Ahem have voiced optimism that the talks could end nearly 30 years of bombing and shooting which killed 3,200 people.

But negotiators broke for Christmas on Tuesday without agreeing an agenda for the next round in January.

The Dublin justice department said the nine men were being freed on condition they kept the peace and did nothing to upset those affected by their crimes.

Among them was Brendan Dowd, 48, who was moved to a prison in Ireland in 1996 after serving 20 years of a life sentence in Britain for conspiracy to murder and causing explosions. At his province's Protestant majority, trial he was said to be the IRA's main organizer in Britain. Another man due for early release from a life sentence was Sean Kinsella, who the Times said was convicted of murder in 1974. The other seven had been due to be freed between mid-1998 and August 2001 from the prison in Portlaoise, about 80 km southwest of the capital.

Local media reported that Dowd at one stage said his unit was responsible for a tavern bombing in Guildford, England which killed four people in 1974.

British authorities jailed three men and one woman for the blast who became known as the "Guildford Four."

Proven innocent and pardoned in 1989, the four walked free. Their case became the subject of the film, In the Name of the can now answer with confidence, "Thabo Mbeke." And if you want to know what that means, read Mandela's farewell speech to the African National Congress this week. After its fuzzy, feel-good transition to Mandelan democracy, South Africa is in for a rude awakening to start the new century.

Who's Thabo Mbeke?

If you don't know much about Mandela's anomted successor, don't ignorant. Nobody . else knows too much about him either. including we for-eign-affairs watchers who have been keeping half an eye on Mbeke for two years, ever since it became clear he was virtually running the government. A few things are obvious about Mbeke. He is a brilliant economist, a graduate of Sussex University in England. He was a member of the South African Communist Party and used it for an astute, pragmatic climb to power. He outran former rival Cyril Ramaphosa, the ex-ANC secretary-general who quit politics for business.

But what?

His father, Govan, was in jail with Mandela. When the ANC was banned, Mbeke took his struggle abroad, shuffling hetween Zambia and England, quietly pressuring the world to pile sanctions on the apartheid regime. At 55, Mbeke has a long political life ahead of

So where is the "bm_?" This is not Nelson Mandela Mark II. Mandela is the rainbow warrior - a man who may. be the only truly color-blind person in Africa. Mbeke is black African first, second, and third - and South Africa's blacks have those priorities. As far as we know, there are no whites on his staff.

"Whites will have to find new entrepreneurial roles under Mbeke, rather than as advisers to government, one. tional experts, Prof. Dennis Davis; told me on a recent visit, to Tel Aviv. "if you ask me will my son or daughter advise the government if they wanted to under Mbeke, I would say, probably no. Nor might they be appointed chief justice. But they should be free to go the entrepreneurial way – the Bill Gates way – and that will be OK," said Davis. "That can be better for the country."

Queen's speech

Here's Mbeke himself at the ANC Congress this week: The message is - the revolution has not been completed.

If you are South African and people ask you "What happens after Nelson Mandela?" you achieve those things for which achieve those things for which our movement was established. The struggle continues." Many who have become used to jolly and charming old President Nelson were taken aback by the harshness of his own speech to the ANC. But they missed the point Mocke has for a long time been writing Mandela's policy speeches. Mandela's farewell address was like the queen's address to parliament the voice is theirs. the words not

At every turn, said Mandela-Mbeke, the ANC is being foiled by those committed to maintaining white privilege.

"White society in general, white politicians, business, the judiciary, the media, the church, do not want to explain their involvement in the maintenance and perpetuation of the apartheid system... All this betrays white society's hostility to the new democratic South Africa." Is this the same Mandela who has spent the last few years cajoling and charming the grumpy and intransigent Afrikaaner diehards into his rainbow republic? No, these are the words of the next president.

That man again

Mbeke is known to have the contempt of an old communist intellectual for the liberal media. Only last week, he again suggested the Orwellian practice of broadcasting unedited government bulletins as television news. His aides are enthusiastic about being able to dictate what is news, and what news is not in the public interest.

The media are deliberately trying to undermine the "revolution." said Mandela. "During the last three years it has become perfectly clear that the bulk of the mass media in our country has set itself up as actorce opposed to the ANC." Is this the same Mandela who of the country's top constitution is idolized by the world media and who so depended on it to bring the struggle against. apartheid to every nation on earth? A South African asked me this week whom, if not Mandela, Mbeke resembles. Easy - he is a suave, clever, revolutionary, intellectually intolerant, African nationalist. Who else but Robert Mugabe of Zimbabwe?

Foomote: The South African ambassador last night hosted a farewell reception for counsellor Henri Raubenheimer. For his outstanding assistance to journalists covering his country's affairs, a simple and heartfelt "Thank You" to Mr. Raubenheimer:

Opposition leader wins South Korean election

SEOUL (Reuters) - Veteran opposition leader Kim Dae-jung was assured yesterday of becoming South Korea's next president after a desperately close vote-count, but will take the helm of a debt-laden country deeply mired in financial

Kim is not due to take office until February 25, when incumbent President Kim Young-sam completes his five-year term. He was constitutionally barred from seeking re-election.

Despite his defeat in yesterday's vote, Lee's Grand National Party still has a simple majority in the National Assembly which was elected last year for a four-year

State television said that, with just over 94 percent of votes counted, Kim had 40.4 percent of the vote, or 9.75 million votes, while Lee won 38.6 percent, or 9.31 million votes. The third main candidate, Rhee Inje, split the majority party's vote,

Earlier Lee's spokesman had forecast defeat, saying: "We accept the result as a scolding by the people and we will try tobe reborn and show the people a new face." Analysts say the victorious Kim will be accepting a poisoned chal-The election was overshadowed by a financial crisis that forced South Koreans to set aside national pride and seek a record-breaking bailout package of nearly $60 bil-lion from the International Monetary Fund (IMF).

It was the 74-year-old Kim's fourth stab at the presidency and probably his last chance of victory.

In fact, some analysts have questioned whether the veteran dissident has the stamina for a five-year term. But for Kim himself, the day he has awaited for so long was tinged with tragedy. His younger brother, Kim Dae-eui, 70, died of liver disease on Wednesday. Officials at Kim's party, the National Congress for New Politics, said he would abstain from making celebratory remarks, partly as a mark of respect for his brother. Kim had vowed that, if he was elected, he would amend the constitution to change South Korea's current presidential system to a parliamentary system by the end of

Yeltsin returns to work feeling 'great'

MOSCOW (Reuters) - Russian President Boris Yeltsin, impatient to rejoin the political fray after a viral infection, was feeling "great" yesterday and said he would resume work today.

Yeltsin, 66, met Prime Minister Viktor Chemomyrdin at the Barvikha sanatorium outside Moscow where he has been recoveriog and said his top priority in the coming weeks is pushing the government's 1998 budget through Russia's hostile parliament.

Everything is all right with me. My illness was not related with any heart problems. It was indeed a cold and there had been danger of complications," Yeltsin sold Russian reporters in televised remarks ahead of his meeting with Chernomyrdin.

Itar-Tass news agency quoted him as saying: "I am ending my stay here. Tomorrow I return to work. And from the new year 1 will return to a full-scale sched-

Some media have speculated that Yeltsin might have suffered a recurrence of the heart problems which forced him to undergo a bypass operation in November last

The Kremlin repeatedly denied the rumors and said the president, who was admitted to Barvikha on December 10, was suffering from an acute viral respiratory infection brought on by a cold.

Asked how Yeltsin felt yesterday, a Kremlin spokesman told Reuters: "Great." Yeltsin made clear the draft 1998 budget would be the main focus of his attention in the coming weeks.

We must have a coofirmed budget in the new year," he said in his televised comments. The opposition-dominated State

Duma, the lower house of parliament, passed the budget in its first reading after Yeltsin made an unprecedented visit to the chamber and personally urged deputies to back it. But the second reading, originally scheduled for yesterday. has been delayed until next Wednesday, making it unlikely the budget can come into force by the start of 1998.

In another sign of political good will, Yeltsin yesterday approved a long-disputed law on government after reaching a "gentleman's agreement" with parliamentary leaders that they would accept key amendments after he had signed

It is very unusual for Yeltsin to sign a law before it has cleared all the parliamentary hurdles. The new law maps out the scope of the powers of Russia's state institu-

A tale of two maps

The atmosphere surrounding Prime Minister needs fully captures Israel's interests when Binyamin Netanyahu's meeting with US Secretary of State Madeleine Albright yesterday was that of a boy having to face his teacher without having completed his homework. The US. playing the forgiving teacher, had already given Netanyahu an extension on his assignment - producing a second redeployment map - until next month, when he has been invited to meet with President Bill Clinton in Washington. What has not been sufficiently recognized, however, is the revolutionary name of Israel's negotiation with

At the heart of this negotiation is the tale of two maps: the map drawn by National Infrastructure Minister Ariel Sharon and another one championed by Defense Minister Yitzhak Mordechai. Sharon's map retains a 20-km strip of the Jordan Valley, a seven-to-10 km hand along the eastern portion of the Green Line, three east-west bands across Judea and Samaria, all water sources, and all senjements and access roads to them. Sharon's "map of interests," accordingly, holds on to about 65 percent of the territories - though Sharon refuses to cité percentages.

Mordechai and Foreign Minister David Levy are backing a somewhat less ambitious map compiled by the Defense Ministry, which reportedly requires that Israel retain about 55 percent of the territories for security reasons. The main difference between the maps is not a maner of percentages, but the fact that the delense establishment's map leaves about 42 settlements – one third of the total, populated by about 30,000 people - as islands within Palestinian controlled territory.

In essence, the military planners and their cabinet backers are saying that dozens of settlements are more of a security headache than an asset. Though heretical from a political point of view, such a judgment is not surprising from the narrow a choice, the military would rather defend neat linear borders than isolated senlements surrounded by: Arab villages. In even stricter military terms, the mostly empty Judean Desert and Jordan Valley, along with points along the mountain ridge, are what the IDF needs most to defend Israel's eastern flank.

the narrow lens with which the military views its embarking on final-status negotiations. Put another way, is the only justification for Israel holding on to territory a military one?

In Sharon's view, and perhaps that of a majority of the cabinet, the settlements themselves define the extent of Israel's interests at least as much as stark military considerations. That this approach is leading to a dilemma has been pointed out by Third Way MK Alex Lubotsky, himself a settler. even in choosing which 10 percent or so to withdraw from in the second redeployment. Lubotsky has raised a potential conflict between the settlement movement and the very value it has voted with its very homes to advance: retaining as much as possible of the Land of Israel.

As Lubotsky points out, Israel has to choose between withdrawing from the spaces between the Arab populations in western Judea and Samaria, or from the largely empty areas of the Judean Desert and Jordan Valley. If Israel chooses to try to hold on to every settlement, it will no doubt have to give up more empty territory. If it instead gives up smaller amounts of land that are more valuable to the Palestinians - because they provide more contiguity to the territory they control - then Israel can retain more of the empty areas.

With the Sharon wing threatening to bring down government that compromises the "national interest" and the Levy wing warning that it will walk away from any government that is not "serious about peace." Netanyahu's margin for maneuver has become razor thin. In such a situation, long-term strategic considerations tend to fall by the wayside in favor of crafting whatever will pass, even in a discussion explicitly dedicated to formulating long-term strategy.

This is a dangerous situation, because Lubotsky is right that Israel may have to decide now whether it will give up more of the empty territory to the standpoint of military cost-benefit analysis. Given east or to further isolate some of the settlements in the west. The Palestinians could spare Israel this dilemma by not abiding by their Oslo commitments - thinking that Israel will not be able to stick by its demand for reciprocity - but that would be a terrible mistake on their part. So, too, would be a failure on the part of United States to convince the Palestinians that Israel is not the only party that The real question at the political level is whether must confront tough dilemmas in order to deliver on its commitments.

MOSHE ARENS

The government's seemingly endless discussions on the second redeployment have digressed into debates about wbat Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu should present to US Secretary of State Madeleine Albright in their meeting in Paris situation? and what Israel's position should be when the permanent-status negotiations eventually begin. In the process, serious errors are going to haunt us in the years to come and that are liable to do Israel's position serious harm. Netanyahu, with Foreign Minister David Levy breathing down his neck, has been preparing for his trip to Paris, expecting to submit for Albright's approval the extent of the second withdrawal that Israel is prepared to discuss with the Palestinians. She, in turn, has already let it be known that the area to be turned over to

In the past, the US has mediated and cajoled, but it has always been clear that it is for the Arabs, and not the US, to accept or reject Israel's positions.

From now on Yasser Arafat will have reason to believe that he can

If the discussions of the cabinet could be kept secret, it might seem reasonable that a decision on the extent of the second redeployment should be preceded by a discussion of what Israel's position on its permanent borders will be when the final-status negotiations eventually take place. However, since these discussions are reproduced almost word for word in the world's media, and the maps presented appear in the following aspect of a specific issue, it is totally inappropriate and unprecedented for the IDF to take a position on what Israel's permanent borders should be.

What's more, there are probably as many opinions on this subject in the IDF as there are generals. For the IDF to come op with a list of towns, villages, and settlements in Judea and Samaria that it claims have no importance from the security point of view is downright scandalous. Next, we could expect the IDF to come up with a similar list for the cities and villages itt Israel itself.

Even though the list is devoid of any sense or meaning, we can be sure that it will be produced by the Palestinians in forthcoming negotiations, and maybe even hy Albright in her meeting with Netanyahu in Paris. We get the impression that our government and most of its ministers have lost all sense of direction and maybe even basic common sense.

Before the ministers choose between the maps of Mordechai and Sharon, they are planning to tour Judea and Samaria, to see the area for themselves. I suggest that they pay attention to two particular locations, Jericho and Hebron. They are stark reminders of mistakes already made and irreparable damage aiready donc.

In Jericho, what was supposed to serve as Israel's security border in the Jordan Valley has been breached by the Rabin government's agreement to turn the area over to the Palestinian Authority. In Hebron - this ancient city of such great religious and historic importance to the Jewish people the agreement concluded by the Netanyahu government bas left the Jewish community in isolated pockets that make it impossible for it to breathe and develop, and place, the lives of the men. women, and children living there in jeopardy, How many more mistakes can we afford?

This is especially true in the Middle East, where France, far from being "the most regular European proponent of the Arah line" supports, together with its European partners and the US, all efforts aiming at establishing a lasting coexistence between countries of the area. Does that really 'ieopardize Israel's interests?'

THE TURKISH THREAT TO CYPRUS

Sir. - The Turkish view that the soon-to-be acquired by Cyprus S-300 anti-aircraft missile defense system presents a growing threat to its security ("Defense ties with Turkey bolstered." trol of the skies that they now enjoy. It will deny them the immunity to attack or coerce Cyprus at will, a practice they have been accustomed to since 1964. And they don't like it. They want Cyprus to be their satrapy and themselves the unchallenged hegemons. We are determined to resist with all our means this neo-Ottoman mentality to dominate us.

Cyprus is finally learning from the Israeli experience and tries against goliathian odds to buttress its defenses. Since it has neither an air force nor a navy and since Turkey rejects outright President Clerides's far-reaching proposal to demilitarize Cyprus, then my country has no option but to rely on systems like the S-300 to defend itself against the real prospect of renewed Turkish attacks. The problem of Cyprus could have been solved years ago if Turkey were to decide to implement United Nations resolution 3212 of 1974 which was adopted unanimously by the international community, even with Turkey's positive vote. Your reporter conveniently also whitewashes one basic fact: there is no such thing as "Greek Cyprus just as there is no Turkish Cyprus." There is one ritory of which is under 30,000 Turkish bayonets in total contravention of every accepted norm and international standard. Talk that Cyprus is a threat to Turkey is a sad joke and borders on the absurd.

f Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu's call for accelerated Ltalks on a permanent-status agreement with the Palestinians is serious, it is important that he and the rest of the country appreciate the need to think beyond the question of maps. The Israeli-Palestinian conflict is certainly about territory, and the demarcation of boundaries will naturally assume a central place in deliberations about permanent status, just as it does in current deliberations about the further redeployments of the interim agreement. Moreover, many of the other permanent-status issues, such as settlements, some of the security arrangements, and even Jerusalem, are actually subsumed by the decision on the future border between Israel and the Palestinian state that will emerge from any permanent-status agreement. There is, however, one major issue that is related only indirectly to the territorial dimension of the conflict - the refugees. And unless this issue is also addressed, a permanent-status agreement, bowever detailed in other respects, will not provide the definitive resolution of the conflict that is the entire purpose of the peace process.

The refugee issue is specifically listed in the Declaration of Principles as a permanent-status issue, but it has been practically ignored in all the negotiations since 1993. One reason is that the PLO itself has not pushed very hard. The DOP, by transplanting the PLO from the "outside" to the "inside," has focused Palestinian anention and energy on state-building. Progress in the peace process now promises tangible achievements for the Palestinian leadership and population in the West Bank and Gaza, but virtually nothing beyond symbolic satisfaction for Palestinians elsewhere, and there is little incentive to dramatize this point by pressing for negotiations that are unlikely to lead any-

Secondly, the refugee question is not only the issue least connected to boundaries; it is also the issue least susceptible to settlement on a bilateral basis. Israel and the PA alone cannot agree to dissolve UNRWA or provide either the political or financial resources needed to rehabilitate and absorb Palestinians not under their jurisdiction. In addition to the 1.2 million refugees in Jordan (including about 250,000 in camps), there are about 350,000 in Lebanon, and

Israel needs, above all, from any almost as many in Syria. In the last two countries (and in most other settlement. The problem is obviously not try governments. But Syria and Lebanon have thus far refused to take part in the multilateral working group on refugees.

Finally, Israel itself has been extremely reluctant even to think about the refugee issue, much less begin to negotiate it. Israel's approach reflects not just a negotiating stance, but a national narrative. According to this narrative, if the Arabs had not opposed partition by force in 1948, there would bave been no war, and if there bad been no war, there would have been no refugees. Thus, responsihility for the creation of the refugee problem lies with the Arabs, and so does responsibility for finding a solution. But even if this narrative is true in the sense that Arab rejectionism was the enabling cause, it is also true that in many cases, Palestinians became refugees, not because of general panic related to the war, but because of specific actions by Israeli forces. The most celebrated such case is documented in the second edition of Yitzhak Rabin's memoirs, which restores a passage, deleted by the censor from the first edition, describing the forced evacuation of Arabs from Lod and Ramie.

IN any case, this is not just a historical investigation, and even if the refugee issue is not Israel's responsibility, it is Israel's problem. For whatever the precise division of responsibility, it is clearly in Israel's interest to ensure that the refugee question does not persist as a canker on the body of a permanent-status agreement and remain as an obstacle to the finality that character of Israel after partition is to he left in the hands of Palestinians - regardless of bow few or many might choose to exercise their right.

But precluding this option does not exhaust all the possibilities, even of what the right of return means. If the refugees and their descendants cannot return to their homes, they can, after a Palestinian state is established, return to their homeland. Repatriation, however, can only be one element in a comprehensive package, which will also have to address questions of compensation for lost property. integration into other countries for those who cannot or will not return to Palestine, and some family reutuon on a humanitarian basis (which is already happening). And since the sense of forced countries.

role in the refugee tragedy will need to elicit some Palestinian recognition of the suffering inflicted on Israel during all the years of the conflict.

At this point, more uncertainty surrounds the refugee issue than any other question on the agenda. It is trot even clear who needs to be involved in its resolution, except that the Palestinian interlocutor must be, not the Palestinian Authority in the West Bank and Gaza, but the PLO as the representative of the entire Palestinian people. Tackling the issue will take a long time and require a lot of creative thought, involving the slaying of some sacred cows on both sides:

But unless that is done, there can be no real reconciliation, hence, no real peace. It is therefore vital to recognize the problem and begin thinking about it now.

POSTSCRIPT

WHAT WITH people having seven babies at a time nowadays. maybe this doesn't sound like much, but a British woman gave hirth to time-lag twins who were conceived a month apart. Debbie Gilbert, 38, Leicestershire, is only the sixth person in the world and the first in Britain to conceive naturally during two different monthly cycles. Experts say the odds against such an unusual pregnancy are in the region of millions to one. "The hormones produced by the first pregnancy were obviously not strong enough to suppress the action of the pituitary gland, which normally tells the ovaries to shut down, said Professor Smart Campbell, head of obsterrics at St Georges Hospital its London.

Gilbert, who has had two daughters previously in separate normal pregnancies, thought she was eight weeks pregnant when she went for her first scan, but doctors insisted that the fetus was 12 weeks old.

A second scan picked up the second fetus, which was four weeks younger than the first.

Her doctor was initially baffled before realizing the twins were conceived weeks apart.

The twins, a healthy boy and girl, were delivered at the same time, when the older one reached full term:

fier two decades of radicalism and revolution, there are signs that the Iranian public is tired of Islamic fundamentalism and international isolation. A relatively liberal candidate (in Iranian terms) won the presidential elections, reflecting demands for economic reform and growth.

Millions of Iranian men and women participated in wild celebrations after the Iranian team won a World Cup preliminary match and advanced to the finals. At the Islamic summit in Teheran, President Mohammed Khatami, advocated an "Islamic civil society" and admitted that Islam has much to learn from the West. He has repeatedly called for a dialogue with the American people, and there are some offibetween Islamic summit in Teberan, which marked Iran's first steps towards ending its international isolation. In their speeches, both the Palestinian and Syrian leaders reflected the concern that after 20 years, the Iranians may be abandoning their radical anti-Western and anti-Israeli policles.

Arafat praised the "sisterly Islamic Repoblic of Iran... whose people, supreme authority, leadership, and government we esteem and love." He reminded his audience of Iran's role in "promoting our crucial causes, particularly the Palestinian cause and the cause of holy Jerusalem." (In this tirade that demonstrates how little has changed since the Oslo Accords, Arafat demanded belp in "delivering boly Jerusalem from the monster represented by

Washington and Teheran. This has raised the possibility, still quite remote, of a rapproche-ment, ending Iran's isolation and the economic boycott.

To repair its relations with the Americans, the Iranian leadership will have to go a long way toward reversing its revolutionary policies.

The US government will oot end sanctions unless there is a halt in support for terror, incloding training, funding, and weapons for Hizbullah, Hamas, and the Islamic Jihad. The US will also demand that Teheran completely halt its efforts to acquire weapons of mass destruction and long-range mis-

At this time, none of these changes can be considered likely - at best, they are remote possibilities. Khatami is still locked in a power struggle with the radical fundamentalists, such as Ayatollab Ali Khameini (the supreme leader), who fear loss of power and continue to view the US as "the Great Satan."

Although he is billed as a moderate, Khatami's statements about the American government are still laced with hostile rhetoric, and he refers to Israel as "a terrorist and fascist state" (while also declaring that Iran will oot oppose any peace agreements that the Arabs accept). In terms of substance, there is oo clear evidence that the cooperation between Iran and Russia in the development of missiles has declioed.

Nevertheless, for those who are looking for signs of hope, there is ecough to build a case for possible change. Twenty years ago, Iran suddenly went from being America's policeman in the Persian Gulf, with a high level of cooperation with Israel, to a virulent anti-American and anti-Israeli state led by fundamentalist Shi'ite clergy. Although unlikely, a similar transformation in reverse cannot be ruled out.

HOWEVER remote the possibility of a reversal of Iranian policies, there are indications that Yasser Arafat and Hafez Assad very nervous. The Palestinians and Syrians sent large delegations and sought to play central roles in the recent continuous and advancing settlements and the threat of Judaization.")

Lest the Iranians be tempted to abandon the Palestinian cause, Arafat reminded them that the threats from the West "should make us close ranks and step up efforts within the framework of an Islamic solidarity and joint action in defense of our joint interests, the just and legitimate causes of our peoples and our Islamic nation...

In his speech, Assad used many of the same themes, stressing the threats from Israel, and calling on the Islamic states to stop normalization with "the Zionists." The Syrians are dismayed by the growing cooperation between Israel and Turkey, and by the possibility, bowever remote, that Iran could eventually follow a similar path. If Iran were to abandon the radical rejectionist camp, the Syrians would be more isolated than ever, and could be forced to follow the path of Egypt, Jordan, and other moderate Arab states in negotiating a peace treaty, including the very nor-malization that Assad has coodemned.

Whatever fears Assad and Arafat may have, they are not sufficient to lead to an abrupt end in the policies of containment and isolation with respect to Iran. The anti-Israeli rhetoric is continuing, and there is also the possibility that Kbatami may not be effective, may oot be interested in ending Iranian bostility toward Israel, or that he could be removed from office by the Islamic establishment.

Iran still supports terrorism and continues its attempts to acquire missiles and weapons of mass destruction. So far, only the tone bas changed, but not the substance. As long as the Iranian government's actions do not change, the policy of isolation must be maintained. However, both American and Israeli officials must also be very careful to avoid onnecessary actions or statements that could slam the door on what might become a Teheran Spring.

The limits of family

f the Jewish people are best described as a family, as David Hartman and others argue, then it is surely a highly dysfunctional one, whose members cannot keep from torturing one another like the characters in O'Neill's A Long Day's Journey Into Night. Calling one another "brother" and "sister" does not appear likely to turn us into one big, happy family anytime in the near future. That impoverished sense of family is nevertheless enough, in Hartman's view, to require the scrapping of the religious status quo in Israel and the importation of American religious phiralism, The Jewish family, he argues, can only be preserved if the Jewish state adopts the position that "Jewish" is a term incapable of definition and confers equal legitimacy on the views of everyone born of a Jewish mother (or Jewish father for that matter.) Tolerance is once again elevated to the status of the highest, if oot only, religious value. But even oo its own terms, Hartman's family metaphor is an argument for preservation of the status quo.

Imagine that an eccentric, but very rich, maiden aunt decided to adopt her household staff. Would her blood relatives recognize her new "children" as part of their family? The Reform movement, with its increasingly eccentric standards for conversion, is the national counterpart of the maiden aunt. Family cannot serve as a common bond when there are not even any agreed upon standards for determining membership.

It is precisely Hartman's view that "family" trumps all other values that underlies the disappearance of world Jewry. Once Jewish parems treated intermarriage as a calamity, and the intermarriage rate was low: 8% for American Jews in 1965, as opposed to a present rate soaring towards 60%.

Today, far from treating intermarriage as a tragedy, Jewish parents, aunts and uncles, siblings and cousins celebrate the nupuals - "for the sake of family." At most, an attempt is made to sprinkle some face-saving baptismal waters on the non-lewish spouse, whose level of Jewish identity will not be appreciably less, and often greater, than that of the Jewish partner.

Rabbi Evereo Gendler of North
Andover, Massachuseus is not embarrassed to announce in the New York Times that he co-officiated at his daughter's wedding along with the groom's father, a Baptist minister. Should these bright young graduates of Harvard Law School be denied their moment in the Times? The nation is dying but the family is preserved.

THE precise nature of the Jewish familial bond, for Hartman, boils down to nothing more than a shared mose view of Jewish history" is thus wedded to minimalist religion. Nor is the connection accidental. As American Jews grow increasingly unable to distinguish their own religious beliefs from a vague ethical monotheism, the Holocaust becomes their primary claim to distinction - Jew as history's champion vicum.

A long history of persecution. however, has proven a weak glue with which to hold together a fracdous people. For one thing, the historical memory of today's TV generadon is very short - measured in balf-hour segments not millennia.

Does any sane person seek for himself to become one more link in the chain of suffering?

"For my children, the Holocaust ancient bistory," says lewish multi-millionaire Michael Swinhardt, as he announces a new initiative for Jewish education. A few years ago, I saw for myself the truth of Steinhardi's observation. 1 took my children to Yad Vashem on Tisha Be'av, where we shared the museum with a group of American teenagers. As they hurried through the record of demonic fury poured out on European Jewry, the question most on their minds was: Where was Jennifer last night? Did you see who she was with?" They had long preceded us by the time we exited the hall and were out on the grass baving a picnic.

I briefly considered mentioning to them that Jews have fasted on this day for nearly two thousand years as a sign of mourning for the destruccion of the Temple. But 1 realized that if the Holocaust moved them so little, the loss of a Temple about which they know nothing, and in which - they would have been appalled to learn - animal sacrifices were offered, was certainly far beyond their emotional grasp.

The second problem with the emphasis on Jewish suffering is that it is fundamentally illogical. What follows from our championship in persecution?

Does any sane person seek for himself to become one more link in the chain of suffering?

The reliance on Jewish suffering as if it argued for a particular course of accon is more often than not dishonest, as well as illogical. More than twenty years ago. I was weeding avocados under a blistering sun with a young kibbutznik about my age. He wanted to know whether I intended to live in Israel. When I asked him why I should, his only answer was Jews had suffered greatly throughout history and should therefore live in a Jewish

Even at the time, our history of suffering seemed a strange starting point for the atheist kibbutznik. Unul very recent times, Jews were slaughtered primarily because of their stubborn refusal to betray their God. By their sacrifice, they gave concrete expression to the view that a life without Torah is not worth living, How, 1 wondered, can a modern Jew, who denies God's very existence and rejects any sacrifice in the name of the Torah. bootstrap his cause by reference to the martyrdom of our ancestors. For him, their choice of death was at best an admirable farce, totally beyond his comprehension.

Of course, awareness of our history is for some the impetus for a deeper investigation of their Judaism. They read the litany of pogroms, mass suicides, and forced exile in the Book of Fire at the Diaspora Museum, and ask themselves: How could my ancestors have chosen, in generation after generation, the near certainty of exile or pogront for themselves and their children? What was the source of their power? But unless they can move beyond history and tap into that power themselves, the momentary arousal will dissipate. "Don't tell your children, 'le's sheer (difficult) to be a Yid." Rabbi Moshe Feinstein used to counsel parents. Teach them instead that it is the greatest privilege to be part of the sliver of humanity chosen to bear God's most precious gift to the world.

Only those who experience themselves as having been chosen for something other than suffering can transmit their Judaism to yet another generation. History records that which is long gone and incapable of being retrieved. Where museums - the resting places of mummies - adom temple and synagogue, one can be sure that Judaism has died inside. For those, however, who view Sinai as the climactic moment in world history, there is no history as such, only an eternal present, a voice that continues to go out from Sinai every day. They live in com-munion with all generations of Jews, in ongoing conversation with Abaye and Rava, Rashi and Maimonides. Were those giants to be reborn today, they could instantly join the debate in any study hall. Only that living Judaism, not some vague memory of past suffering, can preserve our people.

sequel to the Likud's abandonment of Yamit 15 years ago.

None of this can be said of the national-religious public, which created, manned, and upheld the bulk of the trans-Green Line settlements. For them, the prospective pullback is indeed the emotional equivalent of parting with an amoutated limb,

And yet their real tragedy is not in the soil they now stand to lose, but in the Middle Israeli public which they failed to conquer despite a 23year-effort to grab the national steering wheel. Now religious Zionist leaders would do well to fathom the theological, social, and geopolitical roots of their debacle.

Much like the secular kibbutzniks who preceded them, the post-'67 sentler leaders were fueled by a youthful avant garde's rebelliousness, conviction, and sense of des-

Inspired by the writings of Rabbi Avraham Yitzhak Kook, settler leaders saw Zionism as part of a divine plan whereby secularists would lead the restoration of Jewish sovereignty, only to ultimately conform with its newly-adopted religious norms.

Set against this backdrop, the '67 victory seemed to them like Redemption itself. Then, in '73, secular Israel's sudden loss of confidence was to them God's thick hint that the time had come for religious Zionism to assume national leadership. This conviction intensified after Labor's loss of power in 1977. The fusion with Menachem Begin was natural and effective; soon ecough the territories were carpeted with scores of new, predominantly religious settlements.

That God might have no inkling of the divine plan they attributed to Him seemed impossible to Haim Druckman, Hanan Porat, Moshe Levinger, et al. And so, in '82. when in stark contradiction with their theology a secularly-led Israel was actually about to shed territories and settlements, they resorted to the delusion that some sudden cataclysm would turn events around.

Gush Emunim rabbis' frustration with history's refusal to follow their script became even more selfcontradictory when, two years ago. they forbade soldiers to take part in redeploying military camps, and ended up downright pathetic when not one conscript actually followed their command

But the most painful experience for Gush Emunim's founders these days should be the realization that those within the government most eager to satisfy Palesonian demands are non-Ashkenazi Foreign Minister David Levy and Minister Yitzhak Defense Mordechai.

For decades, the conventional wisdom among Gush Emunim leaders was that non-Ashkenazim were on their side. Now they should know better.

In this country, a political movement whose geographic obsessions resulted in social aloofness, and whose unelected leadership has always been exclusively led quintessential sucb Ashkenazim as Levinger, Katzover, Domb, Fruman, Wallerstein and Drukman. Hendler, must end up marginalized. Just like Meretz.

Considering that this leadership is also exclusively religious, it ended up oot only failing to lead mainstream Israel, but often eliciting a kind of resentment, not to say demonization, it did not deserve.

Theologically, as overly political religious sects have done so frequently throughout history, Gush Émunim also obstructed its followers' ability to soberly view the world around them. The Arab-Israeli conflict was interpreted as a re-enactment of the biblical show down between Jacob and Esau. The thought that the Palestinians also have a cause was too difficult to reconcile with God's ostensible plans. Conversely, the nooon of a modern state subsisting while economically aloof from its neighbors and shackled to exorbitant military expenditures, seemed natural.

Now the settler leadership is sufficiently experienced to understand that territorial retreats may indeed be carried out by Zionist leaders from either side of the political map. Still, its agenda - to settle anywhere and any time has not changed. Hence the decision this week to seek Netanyahu's downfall, as if their cause would be served better by Ehud Barak.

But times have changed. Now history is dwarfing the narrowminded nacon state, and supplanting it with regional super-structures. Even some of Iran's clerics are beginning to understand this; soon enough, so will ours.

Jubilee cash vote postponed to Sunday

The Knesset Finance Committee will vote on Sunday on whether to transfer NIS 55 million to the fund for Israel's 50th anniversary celebrations. The issue was discussed yesterday, but both the Labor and Shas representatives requested internal party discussions before voting on the issue. Anniversary organizer Yitzhak Moda'i said he understands the MKs' concerns.

Goldman Sachs to buy 9.5% of IDB

By DAN GERSTENFELD

Discount Investments said yesterday that it will sell 9.5 percent of its parent company. IDB Holding Corporation, to the American investment bank Goldman Sachs Group for NIS 280 million.

In a statement to the Tel Aviv Stock Exchange, the company said that the shares were valued at NIS 79, which is 3% below their closing price on Wednesday.

"I am happy that we found a buyer of such high standing," Discount managing director

He added that the shares represent about

75% of Discount's stake in IDB. "We are still holding a 3% stake in IDB, which we intend to sell in the future," he

Discount received the boldings in its parent company in August as part of deal in which it sold its 26.7% holding in tool manufacturer Iscar to the Wertheimer family, in exchange for $130m. in cash and the IDB stake.

The deal with Goldman Sachs. Wall Street's biggest and most profitable partnership, is still conditioned on various checks by the buyer, the signing of a detailed binding, and approval of the authorities.

Traders said that this is the first time the American investment bouse is buying stocks in an Israeli company. In the past, Goldman was a partner in a group which competed in the previous tender for Bank Hapoalim, along with Ted Arison and Claridge Israel, but it ultimately withdrew.

Tadmor said that the company is looking for further investments as it has almost $200m. in cash. "We are constantly looking for investments, but right now there is nothing specific," Tadmor said. The company has stated that it intends to focus mainly on communications, infrastructure, and financial services.

Most of the cash that Discount holds came from the sale of its stake in Iscar. The company raised another NIS 195m. earlier this month from the sale of its shares in Clair Israel to IDB Development Corporation.
Analysts said that the holding company will have difficulties finding investments as profitable as Iscar.

IDB Holdings is one of the country's largest holding companies, with investments in electronics, communications, insurance, real estate and construction, hanking and brokerage services, and a variety of industrial business.

MKs to push for investment aid rise

By JENNIFER FRIEDLIN

Supporters of the proposed plan to cut capital-investment aid grants from 24 percent to 20%. face a fierce battle, Eli Kazhdan, a senior adviser to Minister of Industry and Trade Natan Sbaransky said yesterday.

"There's been a lot of talk in the [Knesset] Finance Committee about raising the grants to 28%," Kazhdan said. "Some have even suggested raising the grants to 40%." Both the Treasury and the Ministry of Industry and Trade support reducing the level to 20%. Former finance minister Avraham Shohat, current Labor faction leader in the Finance Committee, is leading the move to increase the grants to 28%.

Last year, the government reduced capital-investment aid in high-priority zones from 38% to 34% percent, before lowering the ceiling to 24%.

The current crisis in Ofakim has renewed calls for greater incentives to encourage companies to invest in development towns. MK Pini Badash (Tsomet), who has drafted a recovery plan for Ofakim, said he will lobby to have the size of the grants increased. Industrialists say that increased grants may not result in more investments. "I don't think that increased grants will make a big difference," said David Rubner, CEO of ECI Telecom. "The grants were 38% in the past and that didn't necessarily bring what it needed to bring."

The Treasury recently asked Rubner to hire 150 of Ofakim's unemployed for his company's 1.13b. in 1996, Berry said.

plant in the town. Rubner said he would do so, if the government would offer more comprehensive foreign trade risk insurance and guarantee that the Office of the Chief Scientist would receive enough money to maintain its level of research and development.

Chief Scientist Oma Berry has said she would need an additional $57m. dollars this year to offset the drop in the amount of money her office received.

Texas-based oil company Caltex is, for the time being, no longer interested in purchasing a stake in Dor Energy, according to Shmuel Dankner, who chairs Dor's parent company, the Dankner Group.

In an unsourced article published in yesterday's Ma'ariv, it was claimed Caltex is pulling out of negotiations to purchase a 50 percent stake in Dor because of the political instability in the region.

The companies already work together in the jet fuel area and are examining ways to cooperate in third countries. There were suggestions at the time that the two companies would jointly bid to purchase Oil Refineries, once the government decides to sell the state asset. This, however, was strongly refuted by Dor. Since its establishment in 1988, Dor has won an 18% share of the overall fuel market, but lags behind its competitors in the gasstation sector.

Caltex has operations in more than 60 countries, primarily in Africa, Australasia, and the Middle East. Formed in the 1930s, the company markets products through over 8,500 retail outlets, fuels aircraft at 38 airports, and provides marine fuels and lubricants to more than 100 ports in 22 countries. ### Absorption Ministry wants customs grant freeze

By DAVID HARRIS :

The Absorption Ministry will next week ask the Knesset Finance Committee not to update the customs grant paid to immigrants from Eastern Europe, the former Soviet Union, and Latin America, according to ministry economist Danny Topaz.

The ministry is concerned the one-off payment, which covers the cost of household electric items, is increasing at a far laster rate than the cost of the appliances.

The grant was introduced in December 1990 to help immi-grants who cannot afford to import such goods or come from countries where they are not available. The grant is available in addition to the immigration basket of services available to those arriving from other coun-

Initially, the grant was worth NIS 5,000 to families and NIS 3,000 to individuals. Since then the amount available has increased on an annual basis to NIS 10,000 and NIS 6,000 respectively. The ministry is concerned that since its introduction, the grant has increased some 30 percent in relation to prices of electrical goods, said Topaz.

TASE drops on concern over peace process

Tel Aviv

Stocks fell as investors expressed concern a meeting yesterday between Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu and US Secretary of State Madeleine Albright on a planned pullback in the West Bank would not advance the peace process.

Analysts said stock market investors are waiting to see if the Knesset approves the government's budget proposal for 1998. The Maof Index of 25 stocks slipped 0.74 percent to 294.8. The Mishtanim Index lost 0.63% to 282.47. The Tel Aviv Continuous Trading Index dropped 1.04% to 96.64. Declining stocks included Bank Hapoalim Ltd., Israel's largest bank, down 0.25%. Bank Leumi, Israel's second-largest bank, down 1% and Dead Sea Works, down 2.75%.

"There is a some fear of what will happen with Albright," said Avi Meir, an investment manager at Israel General Bank.

The US has also back pled from Secretary of State Marine Albright's statement that x a disappointing I1 months 0197, she hoped for big thin in December - meaning: "Or e"

Albright's first two of heree that he was serious about advancing the process, officials say. As a result, heading into yesterday's sessions with Netanyahu in Paris and Palestinian Authority chairman Yasser Arafat in London, Albright had lowered her expectations. Instead of obtaining a firm number from Netanyahn on the percentage of land from which he intends to redeploy, she is seeking assurances that he will give her enough to present to Arafat to get the ball rolling.

By Netanyahu's estimate the Israeli plan will be ready by mid-January. In a telephone conference call Monday with the Conference of Presidents of Major American Jewish Organizations, Netanyahu said the government's internal deliberations over its final-status security needs would take two more weeks, and discussions over the extent of the second redeployment another week or two. The process of deliberation we are going through now in the government and in the Knesset, and soon with the opposition, and in a larger sense with the Israeli public, is meant to secure the broadest possible support for an agreement," Netanyahu told the group.

Because of the PA insistence that according to the Hebron Agreement the bill for the second redeployment came due in September, the administration temporarily shifted its focus from an Israeli time-out in settlement construction, to the land transfer question.

There are varying interpretations regarding the extent to which the US resorted to pressure tactics. The tone and content of what was said - and hy whom - suggest that Israel was constantly on the receiving end of administration irritation, although it wasn't the only one. Albright has made known her displeasure with both the Israelis and Palestinians loud and clear since ber National Press Club speech in August. Then there was Clinton's refusal to meet in Washington with Netanyahu last month - and bis hours-long appearance at a peace awards ceremony and luncheon with former and the PA for preferring brinkmanship over cooperation. "All right, signals were broadcast, and we resented it," said Ambassador to the US Eliahu Ben-Elissar, but he insisted that he never feared the situation "would get out of control" or that relations with Washington would be damaged.

Asked whether the administration had exerted pressure on Jerusalem to quantify its redeployment intentions in order to move the peace process along, a senior US official downplayed the "P" word, but did not entirely dismiss it. "Pressure seems to be in the eyes of the beholder," he said. "We have an interest in the peace process, but it shouldn't be more than the parties themselves. We've talked to each side, letting them know our views, what it would take to move ahead. We have an interest. It's not going to be there forever," he warned.

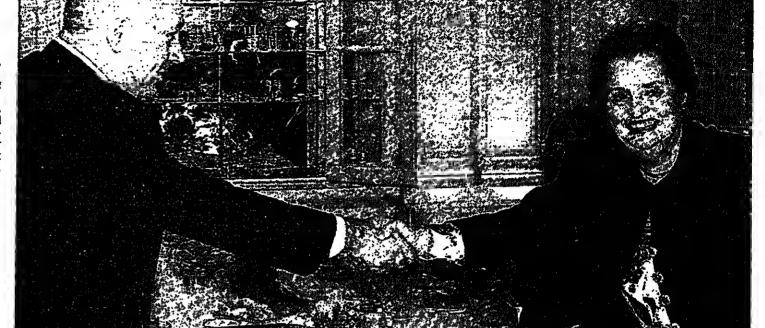

The US official added that "as long as we think a serious effort is being made on what are admittedly difficult issues, we're willing to work intensively to move ahead on the issues. At this juncture, we're trying to work through this."

The executive director of the Washington Institute for Near East Policy, Robert Satloff referred to the administration's actions as "elements of pressure" rather than pressure, because the latter "is what we do to Iran or Iraq. But there's more than a whiff' of pressure, Satloff said. If not pressure, then impatience?

The US official acknowledged that "for a period of time," Albright was "impatient" with both parties. "She saw a deterioration of the process. What she's found is that, in fact, there is an effort to find a way out," he said.

The official asserted that the US is not driven by a hard-and-fast deadline by which it wants to wrap up an Israeli-Palestinian deal on Albright's four-part agenda for spurring the talks: Israeli decisions on IDF redeployment and "timeout"; enhanced security cooperation; and acceleration of final-status negotiations.

At the same time, he pointed out provide the parties time and room to make what Albright has termed the "hard decisions," they don't want to encourage further procrastination, "We're not going to impose an artificial deadline if we see a serious effort is being made. We do conclude that what is going on now is serious and genuine, which means you don't set artificial deadlines. But it's not open-ended. They should be done with some sense of urgency," he caudoned.

Another US official conceded frustration, but contested the assumption that it has been directed solely at Israel. "There's a tendency to write that that frustration is directed against the prime minister. That is wrong," he said. "We are also frustrated that in the first half of the year, the Palestinians [took] their security responsibilities too lightly" and that last week they sought to upgrade their status at the UN.

There's also frustration." he continued, "with some of the Arab states for not going to Doha [for the regional economic conference held in Qatar last month]. The last straw was The New York Times's story 11 days ago maintaining that Albright intended to call Netanyahu's bluff on whether the cabinet was indeed prepared to proceed with the next scheduled redeoloyment. Within days, the Conference of Presidents wrote to Clinton expressing concern over the public airing of differences. Simultaneously, the US's special Middle East coordinator Dennis Ross and Assistant Secretary of State for Near East affairs Martin Indyk, assured the Conference that they were not the sources for the Times story. They also contested the article's thesis. The AIPAC official said the organization believes Ross and Indyk on both counts.

Almost anything can bappen in the interval between the decision and its implementation - which, most senior NRP officials believe, is when the government's fate will really be on the line. So all the current sound and fury from the NRP and others on the Right is just a prelude, menacing noise to serve notice to those who need to be afraid and take heed not just Netanyahu, but Foreign Minister David Levy and Defense Minister Yitzhak Mordechai, who are both pulling the prime minister in what the NRP believes is the wrong direction.

"As things stand right now," admits NRP Transportation Minister Yitzhak Levy. "Yitzhak Mordechai and David Levy appear to be doing better now than they did up to a few days ago. They seem to be tightening their grip on the prime minister and pulling him harder their way. This, for us, is almost cause for alarm. We can sense Netanyahu slipping away in this tug-of-war. My gut feeling today is far less hopeful than it was only last week. If the foreign and defense ministers indeed succeed in yanking Netanyahu towards more concessions, then we will just have to let go of his other hand. As a result, he will fall. Let there be no mistake - we will bring this government down, albeit with a very heavy heart." Levy warns.

NRP INSIDERS say that Levy and Education Minister Zevulun Hammer are in agreement on this. Hammer may be more soft-spoken and seem more moderate, but the basic position had been coordinated between them. Levy is not alarmed by press

Hammer, MK Hanan Porat and Transportation Minister Yitzhak Levy

reports which claim that as many as a third of all settlements in Judea and Samaria may be left in areas out of Israel's control. Such veteran settlements as Kiryat Arba, Beit El and Ofra have been reported to be out of Mordechai's map of security interests.

This is not the information that I have and I believe this isn't the information on which the prime minister is operating. The aim now is not to leave a single Jewish sertlement at the PA's mercy. The misunderstanding may stem from the fact that Mordechai presented two maps - his 'security interests' map and his 'national interests' map. [National Infrastructure Minister Ariel] Sharon fused the different interests into his single counter-map. Mordechai's two maps give birth to all sorts of enoneous specula-

But what if the NRP is wrong? "From our point of view there aren't many possibilities," Levy says. "We sat in the opposition during the Labor government's term because we couldn't accept the Oslo process. If it was a non-staner for us at that time, why should it be approach will pale into insignifiany different for us now?

"The fact that the Netanyahu government might opt for a slower, more careful, but just as full an implementation of it, doesn't make it any better than Oslo was under Labor and Meretz. If the difference is nothing but pace, then for us it smells just as odiously.

"The only reason we joined this government is because of its guidelines and additional decisions," Levy stresses. "But if the government betrays its own guidelines then we do not belong in it."

THAT IS what nearly all nine members of the NRP's Knesset faction say, with the occasional exception of Yigal Bibi and lately also of Shmaryahu Ben-Tzur, chairman of the NRP central com-

"The insufferable ease with which talk of bringing down the government is bandied about frankly frightens me." Ben-Tzur says. "If this government falls, we will surely. by our very own hands, be bringing Labor's Ehud Barak to power and all we criticize as too dovish in Netanyahu's cance if Barak succeeds him. Remember how Geula Coben and Rabbi Moshe Levinger railed against [then prime minister] Yirzhak Shamir?" Ben-Tzur asks. Their all-or-nothing line inflicted Oslo upon us ali. Great care should be taken here, because the alternative to Netanyahu would be disastrous. Barak will surely not admit the NRP into his government. He abhors us and our influence will wither.

"Perhaps if we hadn't been such maximalists and joined Labor's coalition, we could have toned down the damage that Oslo wrought, I caudon my colleagues not to dismiss Netanyahu's pace. Barak will not take such painstaking care. He will hand everything to Arafat. Netanyahu at least tries hard to minimize Oslo's ills."

It the NRP fancies bringing the government down, then Ben-Tzur suggests "it ought to first prepare alternatives and open a dialogue with Labor, since it would almost certainly take over. It would be nice to know, before we dump Nctanyahu, whether Barak agrees with us on security lines, on what the Arabs call the right of return for refugees, on the Jordan Valley, on dismantling settlements. These aren't minor issues. We should think before we kick." Ben-Tzur admits he is in the minority in his party's Knesset

"Truthfully, I don't know if any other NRP MK thinks like me. I, for one, would only cede small bits of territory in return for concrete quid pro quos from Arafat. There are 35 murderers we want extradited. He'd get a certain amount of land for whatever number of killers he turns in. There would be rewards for reciprocity, for apprehending Hamas extremists, for reducing the size of the so-called PA police which has swelled beyond anything the Osio Accords allow. I would want Arafat to return arms he holds in violation of the accords."

But though Ben-Tzur admits to be a near-lone voice in the faction, he claims to "know the central committee and I know I am not alone there. But I also hear the very different voices from the settlements and rabbinical circles. They are clamoring to quit the coalition. I am appalled at the element of adventurism here - 'Let's blow things up first and consider the consequences later.' Even if it's merely a tactical stance, I fear it will get out of control and the government will really falt."

LEVY REJECTS the notion that "bringing Netanyahu down with necessarily put Barak in the driver's seat. If Netanyahu's moves result in our walking out of his government, then it stands to reason that we will not support him for re-election.

"But perhaps the Right will field another candidate. I think we can appeal even to the Left with the idea that peace must not be at any price but must be a credible peace. The Right can win," he insists.

Levy likewise takes issue with Ben-Tzur's fear that the government will fall because the NRP will be unable to curb what it puts into motion.

"We aren't propelled by hysteria. We joined a government which undertook to develop and strengthen settlements. If instead they are abandoned, there will be no difference for us if Labor or the Likud does the abandoning. "Due to the great ferment in the

NRP, I will summon the party central committee as soon as the cabinet comes up with an actual pro-He believes this won't happen for about a month-and-a-half, "and even this timetable is flexible. As I see things now it's exactly even odds that in the end we will either stay or leave the government. It's 50-50."

Levy gets more pessimistic though, when he considers that "a few days ago I thought there were greater odds for our continuing in the government. There is an undeniable trend in an unfortunate direction. We can't ignore the fact that we hear Netanyahu less and less addressing himself to the question of reciprocity and talking too much of redeployment, maps, and satisfying Albright's expectations. We feel an accumulation of terpidations and the heavy burden of tensions, of not knowing where it's all leading and what we will do."

MK Hanan Porat has fewer doubts. "If Netanyahu decides to withdraw without any tangible PA reciprocity, then we will react in stages. As soon as a detailed withdrawal plan passes in the cabinet, the NRP will declare itself free of coalidon discipline. It will vote as it sees fit in the Knesset, even in confidence motions. We will, however, do nothing foolhardy. We will wait." Porat continues: "A decision may be made, but we will only bring the government down when implementation begins. Until the government's decision is put into effect, we may be an unpredictable element in the coalition, but not a rash one. After all, a decision, reprehensible as we may find it, only matters if it is executed. As long as it is only on paper, we can afford to wait because there is no telling what could happen. Maybe it will never be carried out."

A top NRP official, commenting on Porat's remarks, notes that "This is not formal party policy. but it's the nearest thing to it. This is our unwritten resolution. There is almost wall-to-wall agreement that this is how we will act," the official stressed.

Or maybe, as the official quipped, the squire will die, or the dog will die..."

s the Knesset gears up to hammer out the final draft of the 1998 budget, welfare-oriented organizations, think tanks, interest groups and individual activists are making a lastdisch effort to persuade the politicians to change key elements of the Treasury's proposal.

On Tuesday, hundreds of social workers gathered outside the Finance Ministry to demand an additional NIS 2 billion for the health funds and the public welfare services. Former MK and Black Panther leader Charlie Bison announced the formation of a new organization of old-nime Panthers, intellectuals and artists and vowed to "bring down the curreot establishment within a year."

Earlier in the week, the Adva Center, an independent research and advocacy organization, published a 44-page analysis of the social aspects of the budget. The Histadrut, the National Insurance Institute and Genesis, a community-based social rights advocacy group, have all recently issued position papers criticizing various social aspects of the budget.

Next week, the Knessel Labor and Social Affairs Committee, Adva and the Association of Social Workers will host a meeting of dozens of social action groups at the Knesset to discuss the budget.

More ominously for Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu and Finance Minister Yaakov Neeman, MK Maxim Levy, the chairman of the Labor and Social Affairs Committee, warned that his Gesher faction would neither support the budget nor remain in the government if it passed intact.

"We have informed the prime minister that we will not vote for the budget, no matter what," he said earlier this week. "The budget

Unequal health coverage

There seems to be a broad consensus among social advocacy groups that by far the most troubling issue in this year's budget is the proposed changes in the National Health Insurance Law (see story, page 15).

"I don't sleep at night," said MK Naomi Chazan (Meretz) after studying the amendments to the included Encouragement of Growth and Employment in the Economy bill, this year's euphemism for the tradinonal Arrangements Law which provides the legal infrastructure for the budget.
Lea Ahdut, director of the Histadrut's Institute Economic and Social Research. warned that the system which Neeman wants to introduce is regressive rather than progressive. Instead of each person paying according to his or her means for the same health services, the poorer sections of the population, which teod to use these services more, will end up paying a dis-proportionate amount." Adva, Genesis and the Association of Social Workers all singled out the National Health Insurance bill as the most serious or one of the two most serious problems in this year's budget.

"The entire notion of Israel as a welfare state is being systematically undermined by this kind of legislation," said Chazan, "Uotil now, even under the most difficult circumstances, we bave always been able to guarantee

Wherever you look - in health care, education, child and old-age allowances, or public housing - there's less. The brunt of the cuts will affect the elderly and the poor, writes Dan Izenberg dren earning 130-170% of the average wage will lose one-third of the grant for the first and second child (NIS 50 per month per child), while families earning above 170% will lose two-thirds of the grani (NIS 100) for the first and second child. Because child allowance payments for these families will be based on a means test, and salaries may change from time to time, the amendment calls for the employer to pay the grant to the employee and to be reimbursed by the NII. The means test is to be based on the salary of the husband alone, rather than both parents, even if the wife is earning more. We already tried this system between 1986 and 1993 and it did-'t work then either," said Andut.

The government hopes to collect NIS 500 million. This is taxation, any way you look at it, despite the government's declaration not to add to the tax burden. If they are going to tax, let them at least do it progressively and efficiently." Adva estimated that the change will affect close to 400,000 families and that the loss of income t's too late.

Other major issues in the 1998 will already be felt by families in the 50th to 60th percentile of earnthe lower middle-class.

NII payments to the elderly reduced The government also wants to cut in balf the special NII grant given to recipients of old-age allowances based on the number of years they have worked over and above the first 10. For every year of work from the 11th to the 35th year, the elderly are entitled to a bonus of 2% of the value of the old-age allowance. Those who have worked the maximum 35 years are enritled to a bonus of 50%. Today, the basic old-age grant is NIS 867 and the bonus as much as NIS 434. Given the fact that most elderly people receive a small pension or no pension at all. the bonus is a crucial component of their income and cutting it in half will be painful, according to the NII.

"In Israel, where there is no compulsory pension insurance, half the elderly have no pension at all and most of the rest are entitled to a very small one," said the NII in a critique of the budget. Under these circumstances, the reduction of the bonus will hurt the elderly poor."

Public housing deteriorating

Barbara Epstein, the executive director of the Jerusalem branch of Genesis, pointed out that all of the budgetary provisions for people who do oot own their own bomes will go down this coming year. For example, the Housing Ministry last year allocated NIS 1.155 billion to subsidize the rent for special populations. This year, that budget will be down by 9%.

Ministry funding to purchase houses for special sectors of the population has also been cut this year. For example, the budget for special bousing for immigrants has been reduced from NIS 66 million to NIS 56m., even though some have been waiting for housing since 1991. Money to repair the existing stock of public honsing has also been cut from NIS

76m. last year to NIS 66m. this year. In Jerusalem, 427 families are on the waiting list for public housing but the public housing corporations, which own empty flats, lack the money to make them inhabitable, said Epstein.

Less teaching hours, more gray education

One of the top items on Adva's list is the education budget. For the second year in a row, the education budget has been cut in real terms - from NIS 16.362 billion in 1997 to NIS 16.337b. in 1998. The decrease is even more substantial, since the number of students in the education system has increased by 2%. According to Shlomo Swirksi, the author of the Adva budget analysis, the cuts include a decrease in the number of classroom hours (for the second year in a row), which will lead to a resurgence of "gray" (after-school) education for which parents will have to pay out of their own pockets. Gray education, which flourished during the 1980s, when the education budget plummeted because of inflation, increases the gap between rich and poor since the poor cannot afford to pay for private lessons, said Swirski. If that weren't bad enough, the 1998 budget also continues a trend of cutting on the number of special teaching hours for children from deprived backgrounds. Special teaching bours will constitute 11% of the entire basket of teaching bours in the country's junior high schools this year, compared with 12.4% last year, and 16% in 1995, said Swirksi. While the number of available hours is decreasing, the number of potential consumers has increased since 1994, when schools in the Arab sector were added to the program.

Unemployment leading to poverty

According to Eli Ben-Gera, the chairman of the Association of Social Workers, all of the welfare ministries will finish fiscal 1997 in deficit. Yet, despite the fact that unemployment has soured to over 150,000 and is still on the rise, according to government officials, the Treasury is not increasing the welfare budget this year to cope with the problem.

"Unemployment is one of the prime causes of poverty," said Ben-Gera. "If the budget is deliberately designed to countenance high unemployment, a humanist, democratic society based on some sort of social justice would at least provide help to deal with the victims - just like the army provides inced medical facilities to deal in the casualties of anticipated tile." Ben-Gera estimated that addition of 1% of the budget -S 2 billion - half or the health id and half for wefare services would solve the publicm.

"The government can reduce the scope of poverty through the National Insurance Institute or make people poor. Netanyahu received 85 percent of the vote from the residents of the development towns," said Levy, Today, he is disappointing them and they are very angry. Unemployment is reaching enormous proportions. The health system is deteriorating. We will oot sit quietly by and if we don't succeed, we will not be a

The (secret) trial of the public health system

The National Health Insurance Law will be three years old on January 1. But the Finance Ministry may mark the anniversary by trying to disband the system - without even acknowledging it, Judy Siegel-Itzkovich reports National Health insurance Law, whose third anniversary will be marked on January I, is on trial. But the hearing is being held in camera, with the prosecutor and the defense attorney shouting at each other in back rooms. The general public - more like a helpless, abused minor whose custody is being decided for him than a defendant who is asked to testify is largely unaware of the entire process. The media sent to cover the trial have only lately wakened to the gravity of the matter and the issues that are at stake.

Meanwhile, the judge - our political system - is too overburdened. ignorant or uninterested to hand down a reasoned opinion.

"The real danger of the Treasury's] proposed changes is their complete lack of transparendeclares Prof. Shmuei Penchas, the director-general of Hadassah Organization and a member of the State Judicial Commission of Inquiry on the Health System, whose recommendations led to the health insurance law. "There has been no openness in the process, no democratic debate, no professional assessment of the repercussions. Although I myself favor a number of the proposals, including permission to set up private health funds, I am distressed by the fact that the Treasury's plans are shrouded in secrecy, like a cloak-and-dagger operation," Penchas says.

Instead of considering amend-ments to the National Health Insurance Law by first sending. them through the Knesset Labor and Social Affairs Committee (which processed the original law), the Treasury is making major changes in the system by attaching them to the Budget Arrangements Law, Peuchas explains. These are being handled behind closed doors by the Finance Committee (which lacks experience in health matters) and presented in a single package together with a hodgepodge of

Under the National Insurance Law, the elderly were courted by private health funds. The Treasury's proposals could change that. 'No health fund facing market forces wants the elderly and the chronically ill,' says Kupat Holim Clalit director Dr. Yitzhak Peterburg.

The basket of health services, which all the health funds must supply to members, would become clastic, rather than rigid, and the insurers could offer services and treatments that would attract the customer base they pre-

The first public round of fire erupted when Neeman refused to finance the annual NIS 150 million cost of 14 vital drugs for cancer, AIDS, schizophrenia and diabetes patients - demanding that the nealth funds or the Health Ministry absorb the costs. The appearance of hald young cancer patients nugged by Reuma Weizman and pleading for their lives at Beit Hanassi induced the Treasury to retreat, but only slight-

The Treasury seems however to At a cabinet meeting. Neeman and Matza agreed that patients would receive the drugs, contriving a hazy formula of "efficiency measures" to cover the costs. Yesterday. Neeman went to the Schneider Children's Medical Center for Israel in Petah Tikva for a "photo opportunity" with cancer patients, but hospital officials used a private encounter with him to denounce his health policy.

After several closed sessions of the Finance Committee, Marza announced that he had "won the next round," and that the basket of health services would remain fixed. Health funds must request permission for any changes. He also insisted that the family health (tipat holav) centers would continue to provide preventive care, and that government-run centers would not be handed over to the health funds.

The main fight that remains is over the levying of fees for a variety of health services that used to be free or almost free: visits to hospital emergency rooms and community health fund doctors, outpatient clinics, hospitalization, plus a doubling of charges for medications.

Peterburg and the anu-smoking interests demanded that eigarette taxes be hiked by at least NIS 1 per pack which would bring in nearly half a billion shekels to help cover the NIS 1.3 billion deficit in the health system. A survey by the Health Ministry, which supports the idea. showed that 83% of the general public (and 60% of the smokers) favored the tax rather than charging fees for health services.

Although smokers cost the health system billions of shekels a year, and higher taxes discourage young people from lighting up. the Treasury has adamantly opposed this. "I strongly advocate raising tobacco taxes." says Hadassah's Penchas. "But it seems the Treasury wants such taxes to use at its own discretion, rather than for the health deficit, and it worries

Does the IDF want haredi soldiers?

The High Court of Justice is debating it. Labor leader Ehud Barak says he'll push for it. But is the army really ready for haredi conscripts? Arieh O'Sullivan reports n Tuesday, the High Court of Justice was presented with a petition that would limit the number of deferments granted to yeshiva students. The petitioners, Meretz MKs Amnon Rubinstein and Haim Oron, want to force the defence minister to set such a

Earlier this month, Labor leader Ehud Barak said that if elected he would draft haredim.

But is the IDF truly prepared to absorb large numbers of haredim? Does the IDF even want them?

The army and Defense Minister Yitzhak Mordechai have refused to publicly answer this question. Both said they didn't want to comment until the High Court of Justice rules on the matter.

In their replies to the peotion their positions began to emerge. What's becoming increasingly clear is that there is no single view on the subject.

Mordechai declared that even though the number of draft deferments has risen to an unprecedented 7.4 percent of the annual draft pool, it did not present "any significant harm" to Israel's security needs and the maner should be dropped. Rubinstein was disappointed with his response, saying, Quite frankly, we think that this position is tainted by political considerations. Mordechai should be more courageous."

But the IDF's position states that reforms must be made to the system to increase supervision over those who claim to be studying in

Officially, the sectiment in the IDF is that there is a place for yeshiva students in the army. The army is apparently willing to give them conditions to make their service comfortable, such as glatt kosher food and time for Torah studies. And while the army would prefer to have the religious soldiers serve in various units as it sees fit, it would consider setting up special units, without female

Duvdevani, head of the Defense Ministry's Youth, Nahal and National Missions Branch, has held discussions on the possibility of setting up haredi yeshivot similar to the national-religious hesder insolutions, in which religious soldiers do their army service over a period of five years, comhining 18 to 24 months of military service with 36 months of Torah

In private conversations, however, many IDF commanders from all ranks make it clear that, because the haredim lack vocaonal skills and a basic general education, they cannot meet the needs of the modern military machine, and their social condidoning would prevent them from ever truly integrating into the army's largely secular environ-

The court itself has already acknowledged the difficulties. In a 1986 High Court ruling, Justice Aharon Barak wrote: "No one can really say whether the draft of many yeshiva students, who see conscription as a blow to their fundamental faith that Torah studies override their military obligation. will add to the fighting force of the

The fact is that the lifestyle of many of the yeshiva students is extremely religious and therefore causes them many problems assimilating with cultures and societies foreign to them.... They are also split among themselves and recognize various kashrut supervisions and rabhis and their daily behavior is likely to present many difficulties in their deployment in the IDF and confound its framework," Barak added.

THE ARMY bas over 2,000 specific tasks a soldier can learn. The challenge is matching soldiers to the tasks. There are shortages of drivers and mechanics, for example, while for other tasks there is a

"I don't need battalions of society what its needs are and the clerks," one sector officer said.

Last year, the IDF reassessed its deployment of its 5,000 surplus soldiers. Some were offered to the police, others were farmed out to the security services, Defense Ministry and Education Ministry.

But senior IDF officers say the state has never addressed the matter seriously, leaving the army to figure out how to deal with soldiers it doesn't want. As a result, nearly a quarter of soldiers are released before completing their full tour of duty.

So despite the public debate, the army hasn't fought hard for drafting the baredim, because it doesn't believe they could really contribute to sustaining a high-quality fighting force. Not all senior officers agree with this stance. The IDF certainly needs to tell emphasis today needs to be put on sciences and technology and vocational training," says Maj.-Gen. (res.) Ran Goren, who was OC Manpower Branch from 1989 to 1992. "The paradox here is that you need to overdraft to find those who are suitable.

"That doesn't mean the IDF won't find a place for the haredim to serve. If they are drafted early, at 18, then most of the yeshiva students could certainly perform a useful service," says Goren. In fact, Goren believes that at least 20 percent of the haredim would be found fit for combat duty.

"You bave to remember that some of these Shas types suddenly found religion shortly before being drafted. There is nothing saying that they won't make good combat soldiers. They are not people who grew up in anti-Zionist yeshivot like the Natorei Karta. If they get in in the beginning then they will be good. "It could be that they'll be put into an arrangement like hesder. I don't see any possibility of setting up something which is more religious than that, since hesder is already too much." Goren says.

IN 1968 the army handed out 800 deferments to full-time yeshiva studeots. In 1996 the number reached 28,547, nearly 2,000 more than the previous year, according to the IDF. That represents the cumulative number of defermeots issued, and not just the new ones.

In 1995 the new deferments represented 5.5% of the draft pool. In 1996 it came to 6.4% and this year it has reached 7.4%, Amnon Rubinstein estimates that by the end of the decade, the number of religious deferments will reach 10% of the draft pool.

"If nothing is dooe about this then we will see the demoralization of the people who do serve. It will make it more difficult to release men from reserve duty and ultimately shorten compulsory military service," Rubinstein says.

anukka, the Zionist movement discovered, could be so much more than a children's holiday commemorating a miracle and a cruse of oil. It could be a vessel filled to the rim with symbols and messages used to rally the nation around the Cause.

Hanukka, perhaps more than any other holiday, has - over the centuries - gone through a dramatic transformation. It has gone from a story celebrating the miracle of the oil that lasted eight days

instead of just one - the Talmudic version, to the celebration of heroism and military victory - the Zionist movement's interpretation.

University political science pro-fessor Eliezer Don-Yehiya, was historically not central in Jewish tradition. But with Zionism, it became perhaps the most important holiday. There has been a complete change in emphasis. In the Talmod, the emphasis was on the miracle of the oil and on lighting the candles and less of an emphasis on the military victory.

The Zionist movement emphasized the heroic aspect of the holi-

Now, 50 years after the establishment of the state, the holiday is undergoing yet another transfor-mation. This one, according to Schweid, is much more troubling.

"People are oow paying more

attentioo to the sufganiyot

[doughnuts] than to ideas," he said. This is a natural process; it has to do with ideology becoming less a part of the holiday. The tradition today is to eat as much as

A good example of the impor-tance of the boliday appears in an article written in the 1950s book from 1951 to 1955, wrote that Hanukka "is a holiday that is close to us in spirit ... a festival of the victory of activism - nationalist, political, socialistic - of freedom and the struggle for it, the sense of sacrifice and the power of aspiration. The days of Hanukka have once again become days of salva-tion and victory." Contrast that interpretation to the description of Hanukka in the Talmud, and it becomes clear just how greatly the boliday's emphasis, for so many people, has changed.

What is Hanukka?" the Talmud asks in Tractate Shabbat. "When the Greeks cotered the Sanctuary, they defiled all the oils, and when the Hasmonean house prevailed

In the first of a series of articles marking Israel's 50th anniversary, Herb Keinon looks at what has happened to Hannuka. The holiday that used to be the equivalent of Independence Day in the pre-state era is fast becoming just a big doughnut feast > soon after in the way the holiday was celebrated in schools and at

For a time, Hanukka was celebrated with the symbols of Independence Day," she said. "It was celebrated with flags, and with the Jewish National Fund box as a central fixture at parties."

Weiss-Goldman has put together a source book of texts for Hanukka. In some texts the Arabs are the ones who appear as the Greeks, and the Hasmonean-Greek conflict looks like the Israeli-Arab one, she said. "In other texts the conflict is between the Zionists and anti-Zionists. In these cases, the Hellenistic are those who did oot make aliya. The question is who is your enemy. Everyone had their own interpretations of who were the Hasmoneans, who were the who were the Hellenists.

The haredim, said Don-Yehiya, obviously looked very oegatively on this new interpretation. "They say it is ironic that those putting Hanukka in a central role in Jewish life were people they viewed as the spiritual heirs of the Hellenists," he said.

The problem with the nationalistic rather than the spiritual spin the Zionists placed on the holiday, according to Don-Yehiya, is that it is not in line with historical facts. The Hasmoneans would have tolerated the Greeks had they not promulgated religious decrees. The secular Zionist movement, he argued, overlooked this and reinterpreted the holiday so that the causes of the revolt were oot stressed, and the spotlight was directed at the heroism and courage of the fighters and at the continued struggle for political independence even after the religious decrees were abolished." The Zionist movement, Don-Yehiya said, oot only reinterpreted the boliday to fit its message but also changed the way it was celebrated. "If prior to Zionism the boliday was celebrated inside the home, with dreidels and potato pancakes, the Zionists took it into the public arena. They initiated torch runs, marches, rallies, marathons to Modi'in, visits to the graves of the Maccabees." All this, however, was toned down with the birth of the state. Soon many of the I placed on Hanukka were simply transferred to Independence Day, and later to Jerusalem Day as well. Another reason for the decline in the importance of Hanukka, wrote Don-Yehiya in a paper dealing with the role of Hanukka in Zionist ideology, was "related to the attitude of David Beo-Gurion, who wished to glorify the biblical period and its heroes, oot the Hasmoneans or other heroes of the post-biblical period. Although Judah the Maccabee and Bar-Kochba were undoubtedly brave heroes, they were eventually defeated and were unable to preserve and consolidate the political independence for which they fought." Ben-Gurion wanted as beroes an eoduring political and military establishmeot, Don-Yehiya argued, not the fleeting achievement of the Hasmoneans. "Today," Doo-Yehiya said, "I think we are going back, to a certain extent, to the traditional [spiritual] message of the boliday more of an inclination to observe it as it was always observed, privately at home, lighting candles, eating part of a change in Israeli society. The values that were so important at the beginning of Zionism and the state - values of strength and heroism, and the Terusalemites can testify that although you can take the mayor out of City Hall, you can't take Jerusalem out of the mayor. Although he is no longer in office, Teddy Kollek, who served as mayor for over a quarter of a century, continues to promote Jerusalem's interests. He did so most recently at the opening of a Ludwig Blum memorial exhibioon sponsored by the Jerusalem Friends of the Hebrew University. After reminiscing about Blum and the generation of the Palmah, Kollek - who opened the exhibition - stressed the need for the university to maintain its contacts with its Jerusalem-based alumni and thereby strengthen both the university and the city. Among those who applauded not only what he said but the fact that he spoke for much longer than his usual two minutes were Lily Silver, Batya Borowski, Barhara Mandel, Ra'anana Meridor and Judge Zvi Tal.

AS AN introduction to its new monthly lecture series in English, Beth Hatefutsoth, the Museum of the Jewish Diaspora, held a cocktail reception for members of the diplomatic corps who, after touring some of the exhibition galleries, sat down to listen to MK Amnon Rubinstein discussing the problems of pluralism in Israel. Despite competing func-tions hosted by the ambassadors of Japan and Kenya, there were several ambassadors in attendance such as Fermin Zalada of Spain. Euripides Evriviades of Cyprus. Frank Land of South Africa, Theodor Waliau of Germany, and Wolfgang Paul of Austria. But

Grapevine ambassadors were outnumbered by consuls, honorary consuls, and cultural and press attaches, who

Pe'er, who had been a co-compere of the event. recalled that the contest bad been held in Jerusalem just five days after the signing of Israel's first peace treaty with an Arab state.

ISRAEL's actress of the year, Esti Zakheim, was on hand with Tel Aviv Mayor Ronni Milo for the launch of the Alam patrol vehicle, which will seek out distressed youth in life-threatening situations on the streets of Tel Aviv. The patrol vehicle is a Pelephone project and the company's managing director, Benny Einhorn, was also present for its inauguration ceremony. Alam, which operates in Jerusalem as well as Tel Aviv, has been adopted by the Bankers Association, the Kahanov Foundation, Reshet, and Gitam-Porter Novelli as part of the Israel 2000 project towards a better

IT wasn't a goal, it was a girl, but Maccabi Tel Aviv star soccer player Nir Klinger and his wife, Michal, couldn't have been happier with the arrival of their second daughter Shai-Li, a sister to threeyear-old Anat. AIPAC, Ben-Elissar and US officials contend that no crisis was imminent then or now. They say the Israeli-US relationship is too deep, historical and friendly to be seriously damaged by Israel's current peace process strategy. One of Indyk's predecessors at the State Department, Richard Murphy, believes the relationship can withstand criocism and that there's no reasoo to fear "it's the beginning of the end, or that the Arabs will launch a war.'

Starting today, Time Out is being expanded to 32 pages, half again as large as it has been to date. With the additional pages, we are able to give you more entertainment-related articles and expanded and more readable television listings. We shall also present more comprehensive radio listings for each day of the week. To make it easier to use, Time Out editor David Isaacsoo has devised easy-to-read prime time boxes for selecting your favorite televisioo programs.

We bope to make Time Our your indispeosable leisure guide. To this end, we are adding Adina Hoffman's capsule summaries to see, and veteran reviewer Haim Shapiro's tips on top restaurants. Joel Gordin's popular motoring column also moves to Time Out, while art lovers will enjoy the extra space we will be able to devote to the authoritative coverage by Meir Ronnen and Angela Levine of Israel's exciting art world.

The changes don't stop there. We are adding another page of international news, to complement our already enhanced sports coverage.

The Magazine, edited by Calev Ben-David, is being expanded to a regular 32 pages. Many of you have asked for more material for your Shabbat reading, and we are pleased to give you more of the best of English-language journalism in Israel. Many of you have also requested additional local coverage. To this end, City Lights is expanding to 16 pages, under the creative leadership of veteran editor Shelly Goldman. In Jerusalem, under its new editor Ruthie Blum, is growing to 20. We hope these bright publications will be to your satisfaction and lead to increased understanding of the communities in which Anglo-

To celebrate Israel's jubilee year, we at the Post will be taking the opportunity, starting today with Herb Keinon's article on Hanukka then and now, to examine the miracle of the past 50 years of development, to relive memorable occasions in the state's history and to celehrate the lives of those who helped make Israel the special country it is.

We at The Jerusaiem Post are extremely grateful that you let us into your homes, and six times a week take the time from your busy schedules to read our newspaper. Our goal is a more informative, entertaining, and useful publication. The changes you will see today are but one more step in a continuing process to improve our product. As always, I welcome your comments and suggestions. You can write me at The Jerusalem Post, POB 81, Jerusalem 91000, me

Israeli drivers, it turns out, are not so omery and davka-minded as popularly believed. When the Seat Belt Law went into effect in the mid-1970s, it was widely prerate in the world.

In a study published last year based on road death statistics from 52 countries - mainly developed ones - Link found that Israel had the 16th "best," or lowest, death rate per kilometers driven. Sweden was lowest, England second-lowest. In deaths per vehicles, Israel ranked 23rd. In deaths per traffic injuries, Israel ranked fourth lowest.

On December 16, Berson received what he called a "love letter" from the Commission de Protection de la Langue Française, saying that five Hebrew letters on his outdoor sign were too big. The sign, erected 50 years ago, displays the company's name, "L. Berson & Fils," the word "monuments," which works in both English and French, and the Hebrew word for monuments, matzeivot. While the French word is much longer, the five Hebrew characters are slightly taller - a no-no in Quebec.

Sign laws in the Canadian province, where separatist sentiment is always percolating, require that English and other languages be two-thirds smaller than the French.

But maybe the most dangerous myth of all is that road accidents and deaths are just something we have to live with, an unavoidable price of modern life. The Australian state of Victoria cut its annual traffic death toll in half from about 800 to 400 - in one

A 'thank-you' to those friends

That a delight it was to meet our readers at last V Friday's book fair at ZOA House in Tel Aviv.

It was even more delightful to accept from them over NIS 2,000 in donations for our Hanukka Toy Appeal.

Now I only have to raise another NIS 48,000 to pay the whole-salers' bills for the toys I have already sent to municipalities, institutions, foster homes and deprived families all over the country.

With only five days left before the first candle will be lit, I was getting a bit nervous that our readers had forgotten us, but as you can see by listing below, things are not so bad. You have remembered.

The problem was the recent strike which left your donations piled up in mailbags all over the country. At last, the mail is beginning to be delivered, for which I thank one and all.

However, there is a simple solution. Plastic. You can phone me and give me your Visa credit card details and light the first candle knowing that you contributed to those less fortunate and made a lot of kids happy. Please call (02) 537

Different people raise money for the funds in different ways and now for the third year, our friends of the Ramatayim Men's Choir have organized an evening of Jewish music featuring guest soloist Zalman Deutsch, Pirchei Efrat, The Young Ankor Choir and the T3-Koli Choir, which will take place at the Israel Museum, at 8 p.m. on December 31.

All proceeds to benefit our good causes. Remember the slogan of our funds: No one ever got poor from giving charity. Only richer in spirit. Mail your checks to: The Jerusalem Post Funds, P.O. Box 31. Jerusalem 91000.

Donors in the United States wishing to receive tax benefits can send their donations to: Friends of The Jerusalem Post Funds, 211 E. 43rd Street, New York, NY 10017. Please designate in your letter to which fund you wish to donate.

Rangers find some winning form

MIAMI (AP) - Mike Eastwood scored two goals - his first of the season - and Pat LaFontaine had another game-winner as the struggling New York Rangers beat the Florida Panthers 4-2 Wednesday night to win for only the second time 11 13 games.

New York scored three goals in a 4:38 span in the third period to drop the Panthers' home record to 4-12-3. The Rangers, playing amid reports of a major shakeup, had a 1-7-4 record before Wednesday night – including a 4-3 loss to New Jersey on Tuesday night. LaPontaine has 17 points (7 goals and 10 assists) in nine games against the Panthers and leads New York with 16 goals this season.

Islanders 4, Sabres 0

At Uniondale, New York, Tommy Salo stopped 28 shots as the New York Islanders beat the Buffalo Sabres to extend their unbeaten streak to three.

Robert Reichel had two goals and an assist for the Islanders, while Kenny Jonsson and Zigmund Palify each had a goal and assist in the rough game, marred by 114 penalty minutes.
Lightning 2, Bruins 0

At Tampa, Florida, Corey Schwab made 31 saves for Tampa Bay's first shutout this season as the Lightning beat the Boston Bruins.

Vladimir Vujtek's first-period goal and Dino Ciccarelli's late empty-netter helped Tampa Bay extend its home unbeaten streak to six games. Red Wings 2, Avalanche 2 In Denver, Peter Forsberg scored with 2:15 left in regulation as the Colorado Avalanche and Detroit Red Wings skated to a tie. Forsberg tied the game when he tipped in a backhander by Clande Lemieux, who had a goal and an assist

Canucks 5, Coyotes 1 In Phoenix, Pavel Bure had a goal and two assists as the Vancouver Canucks beat Phoenix to extend the Coyotes' winless streak to eight games. Trevor Linden, Gmo Odjick, Dana Murzyn and Jyrki Lumme also scored for the Canacks, who won for the second time in their last eight games. Blackhawks 0, Oilers 0

In Edmonton, Alberta, goaltenders Curtis Joseph and Jeff Hackett dueled for 65 minutes as the Edmonton Oilers and Chicago Blackhawks played to a tie. Joseph made 28 saves to earn his third shutout of the season for the Oilers. Hackett, playing in overtime for the second consecutive night, made 30 stops for his second shutout for the Blackhawks, both on the road. Maple Leafs 6, Mighty Ducks 2 In Anaheim, California, Mats Sondin put the game out of reach with a pair of third-period goals 20 seconds apart and Darby Hendrickson also scored twice as the Toronto Maple Leafs beat the Anaheim Mighty Ducks.

Rookie Mike Johnson, finally starting to generate some offense on the road, assisted on go-shead goals by Hendrickson and Igor Korolev. Mathieu Schneider added an unassisted goel to help the league's sec-ond-weakest offensive team end a three-game road slump.

Nigeria appoint Milutinovic as new coach

LAGOS (Retter) - Yugoslav Bora Milutinovic has been appointed coach to the Nigerian national team, a spokesman for the Nigeria Football Association (NFA) said yesterday. An NFA spokesman said Milutinovic would prepare the Nigerians for next year's World Cup finals in France, where they are drawn in Group D with Spain, Bulgaria and Paraguay.

Milutinovic, 53, replaces Frenchman Phillipe Troussier who was sacked by the NFA in September after guiding them to the World Cup finals. The Yugoslav was sacked last month by Mexico despite coaching them to France '98.

Kipketer tops Reuters poil

LONDON (Reuters) - Wilson Kipketer, who equalled and then twice smashed the long-standing 800 meters world record this year, is the winner of the Reuters 1997 Sports Personality poll.

The Kenyan-born Dane, who broke Seb Coe's 16-year-old record, knocked US golfer Tiger Woods and Swiss tennis player Martin Hingis into second and third positions in the poll of sports journalists.

Kipketer scored 220 points from a maximum 505 after a third of voters plumped for him as their top personality or runner-up. More than 100 sports journalists from 43 countries ranked their leading five sportsmen and women from a 30-strong list compiled by Reuters sports correspondents.

Woods was the first of four Americans to claim berths in the top six in the poll, ahead of tennis world No. 1 Pete Sampras, basketball's Michael Jordan and boxer Evander Holyfield.

Denmark join Dutch in NatWest Trophy

LONDON (Reuters) - Denmark will join the Netherlands in the 1999 NatWest Trophy, the England and Wales Cricket Board (ECB) said yesterday. The 1999 competition will be contested by 60 teams - the 18 first class counties, Scotland, Ireland, Denmark, the Netherlands and 38 amateur teams representing English county boards. The Danes will play away from home but the situation will be reviewed for 2000 pending the quality of a new grass square currently being laid in Broadby.

Stewart unveils non-tobacco sponsors

LONDON (Reuters) - Jackie Stewart yesterday unveiled two new, non-tobacco sponsors for his Formula One team two weeks after motor racing's ruling body questioned its financial viability for the 1998 season.

The former world champion, whose team entered the sport last season, announced deals with the Lear Corporation and MCI which are expected to bring in five million pounds a year.

Lear's deal is particularly important because it will see the automotive suppliers develop a state-of-the-art cockpit that will set new standards of safety in the sport. MCI are involved in communications services. Stewart remain the only team not to receive money from tobacco sponsorship.

If there's any consolation for the unlucky team facing Sanders, it's this: The Lions often lose despite Sanders' efforts. They have been a study in stunning mediocrity throughout Sanders' brilliant career.

Basically, the Lions have given Sanders the kind of slim support Walter Payton had in Chicago, pre-Fridge and pre-punky QB. But this Sunday presents Sanders and the Lions with a pair of delicious challenges. Sanders needs 131 yards to reach 2,000 for the season. The Lions need a win to reach the playoffs. This double-barreled dose of home-team motivation is what awaits the Jets at the Silverdome. The main focus is beating a very competitive Jets team," Sanders said. "If we just keep focusing on winning the game, the playoffs and everything clse will take care of itself. I think if we play well, we can easily get the 131 yards." In this instance, the odds are that a good day for Sanders will mean a good one for the Lions.

Those who believe the lets are playoff bound after their improbable weekend should think twice. There are no guarantees for the Jets this Sunday, particularly when Sanders has the ball and a few good excuses to keep running.

"You just have to understand," Jet Coach Bill Parcells said.

"He's a game-breaking-type player. If you give him room, he's going to hurt you."
The Jets may be in for a long afternoon, for this very reason: Parcells, defensive coordinator Bill Belichick and the Jets haven't seen a runner anywhere near the caliber of Sanders' this year.

"He's awesome," said Jet cornerback Otis Smith, still soaking up his 15 minutes after returning two interceptions for touchdowns against Tampa Bay. "A majority of stuff he does, he doesn't even know he's going to do it until it happens. They say he's gotten slower, but this year he's gotten faster.

Sanders has conquered the decline that goes with longevity and in his ninth and back in football. The life span of a runner rarely extends this long, and even great ones eventually tire from the wear and tear. Emmitt Smith and Thurman Thomas should know. Just a few years ago, they were being compared to Sanders. Now he has left them and everyone else breathing his fumes. He has 1,869 yards, with a heaping six-yards-per-carry average, and still counting. "Every time the ball is snapped, I expect to make something happen and make a big play." Sanders said. "I feel like each time I get stopped that I'm one play closer to breaking one." A shifty 5-foot-9 runner who bursts through boles, maintains his balance and makes people miss may give the Jets' defense fits. This unit is spotty at best and doesn't have nose tackle Emie Logan, done for the year with a broken leg. It doesn't receive the maximum from its premier players every Sunday. Some days Hugh nere, some days no isn't. U day Mo Lewis is applying pressure, another day he's seldom seen. And has anyone heard from Marvin Jones?

Everyone must report for duty this weekend. The offense, with its patchwork line and shaky quarterback, is too unstable to expect more than two touchdowns to come from it. The margin for error, then, is slim for the Jets' defense. Smith will be matched against Herman Moore, the tall and speedy Lions receiver who beat the Vikings with big-time catches. Lions quarterback Scott Mitchell can be rattled and is prone to selfdestructing, but he can also make the big

The big concern, of course, is neither. The big concern is Sanders and his thirst for immortality.

Besides the 131 he needs for 2,000, Sanders has a chance at Eric Dickerson's single-season rushing record of 2,105 yards. He'll need 237. That's a reach for anybody but Barry. (Newsday)

Toto mania overtakes interest in league

By ORI LEWIS

Any fears which Toto punters might have had about this week's soccer program being canceled were allayed yesterday when the Finance Ministry agreed to transfer the NIS1.6 million to the IFA for policing of matches.

The Toto hopeful will snuggle up at home and listen to the radio, or else they will brave the wintry weather in the hope that they might be the lucky ones to share in the NTS 20 million (minimum) jackpot on offer this week.

On the face of it, this weekend's National League fixtures do not appear to pose a daunting prospect for prediction, with perhaps only one or two matches looking as if the matchups are close.

But that is only half the story. Apart from the odd upset which the National League might produce, the Second Division will certainly be a tougher prospect for the Maccahi Petah Tikva's home match with leaders Betar Jerusalem is the weekend's featured match. Betar have not lost vet this season in the league, but despite their 5-2 win over Hapoel Beit She'an last week, they were far from impressive. A club like Maccabi Pemb Tikva might just be the ones who will even up the Jurusalemites' record just a little. Maccabi's journeymen are fit for the most part, while Betar are missing many of their key players through injury or suspension. But while this might affect other teams, Betar appear to have a bevy of star reserves who appear able to keep the momentum. One wonder for ow much longer.

In other matches, second-placed Hapoel Tel Aviv host Hapoel Ashkelon, while the two Haifa sides appear to have fairly easy fixtures: Hapoel are away to Hapoel Beit She'an and Maccabi host Hapoel Beersheba at Kiryat Eliezer.

Maccabi upsets Olympiakos 76-71

End Group A in top three thanks to Pilsen's win over CSKA Moscow

By BRIAN FREEMAN

The Maccabees ain't got nothing on Maccahi Tel Aviv.

Maccabi Tel Aviv did their namesakes proud last night, giving Olympiakos a Hanukka lesson about the power of the underdog to emerge victorious over powerful Greek adversaries with a 76-71 win in Athens.

The victory over the defending European champions, combined with CSKA Moscow's 71-63 loss to Efes Pilsen in Istanbul, means that Maccahi ends the EuroLeague's first round in third place with a 5-5 record, earning it the right to play the three bot-tom clubs in Group B when the EuroLeague resumes on January Maccabi - along with Olympiakos and Efes Pilsen are now placed in a group with Split, Ankara and Porto, which have a combined 9-21 record. A Maccahi loss would have put it in a group whose three new teams have a 21-9 combined mark and made it a much more difficult road to the Final Four.

Maccabi earned only its second win in nine tries this decade in Greece during the championships with perhaps its best defensive performance of the season.

In Olympiakos's 87-73 rout of Maccabi at Yad Eliahu earlier in the season, Arturas Karnisovas and Steve Hawkins scored a combined 59 points (with Dragan Tarlach, who did not play last night, adding 13 more), hut last night Nadav Henefeld and Doron Sheffer led the team's defensive effort in limiting them to a comhined 19 points.

The loss was Olympiakos's first at home this season and only its third in the past 25 European home games.

Earlier in the evening, it appeared as if the Greeks were on their way to another victory before their fans. Olympiakos battled from behind for much of the first half to tie the game at 33-33 going into the locker room. A few seconds into the second period, Rashard Griffith committed his fourth foul on a drive to the basket. Considering the fact that both his backup Constantin Popa and top defensive player Henefeld had three fouls, it was oot too difficult to imagine the Greek big men exploiting the situation to totally dominate the inside.

HELPING MACCABI - Efes Pilsen's forward Mirsad Turkcan (left) fights for the ball with Valeri Daineko of CSKA Moscow durg. ing their Group A game in Istanbul on yesterday. Efes Pilsen won 71-63, which meant that Maccabi's win over Olympiakos put the Israelis in third place in the group.

The key point in the contest came with 14 minutes remaining in the game and Maccabi holding on to a slim 43-40 advantage.

A foul was called on Alexios Amanaoidis and in the ensuing argument from the Olympiakos bench the referee also gave the team a technical. Maccabi made all four freethrow attempts to boost the margin to 47-40, a cushion which was much need later as Olympiakos closed the game to as close as 71-69 with a minute

Randy White led Maccahi with 18 points, while Oded Katash had 17 (only 5 in the second half), Doron Sheffer 14, Rashard Griffith 12 (10 of them after he had committed his fourth foul), Nadav Henefeld and Constantin

Popa 6 and Borko Radovic 3.
For Olympiakos, which finished the group in first place despite the loss, Milan Tomic led the way with 16 points, John Rogers had 14, Dussan Voukievic 14, Steve Hawkins 12 (all in the last five minutes of the game), Arturas Kamisovas 7 (ottly one in the second half), Panagiotis Fassonlas, in his first European game hack from injury, 5, and Alexios Amanaoidis 4.

Bulls old-timers still good enough against young Lakers

CHICAGO (AP) - Michael Jordan, Dennis Rodman and the rest of the Chicago Bulls' old-timers did just about everything better than the kids from Los Angeles, defeating the Lakers 104-83 Wednesday night.

The 34-year-old Jordan, often matched against teen-ager Kobe Bryant, scored 36 points. And Rodman, 36, with a new hair dyejob featuring a smiley face on the back of his head, grahbed 14 rebounds as the Bulls improved to 11-1 at home.

Luc Longley, who missed the previous game with a sprained ankle. added a career-high 23 points for the two-time defending NBA champions, who shot 50 percent and onthustled the league's supposed team of tomorrow.

Bryant scored a career-high 33 points — 16 in the garbage-time fourth quarter — for Los Angeles, which is 7-6 since its franchiserecord 11-0 start.

Wizards 88, Heat 74 In Washington, the Wizards raced to a 32-12 lead after one quarter and Rod Strickland scored 21 points as Washington improved its record at Stephon Marbury, who made two clinching free throws with 12 seconds left, chipped in 14 points and 14 assists, and Stanley Roberts had 10 rebounds as the Timberwolves won for just the second time in their last six games. Celtics 88, Raptors 83 In Toronto, Walter McCarty hit a key 3-point shot with 59 seconds left and Chauncey Billups scored nine points over the final 4:16 to lead Boston over Toronto.

The win was the Celtics' third in their last four games and gave them a three-game series sweep over the Raptors, who extended their home losing streak to 11 games as their NBA-worst record dropped to 2-23.

Antoine Walker had 18 points and nine rebounds. McCarty and Ron Mercer each scored 12 points. Hawks 94, Cavaliers 83
